ABIELLE, *Merlin's genius, invisible to the SCENE: Merlin's Island

ACT I

A Gallery in MERLIN's Palace

(MERLIN is seated near ARIELLE, who is sleeping on the steps of a marble staircase. It is night.)

MERLIN

YOU sleep, my Arielle, you, my inner force, the neglected power which slumbers in every soul and which I alone, till now, awaken at will . . . You sleep, my docile and familiar little fairy, and your hair, straying like a blue mist, invisible to men, mingles with the moon, the perfumes of the night, the rays of the stars, the roses that shed their petals, the spreading sky, to remind us thus that nothing separates us from any existing thing and that our thought does not know where the light begins for which it hopes, nor where the shadow ends which it escapes . . . You are sleeping soundly and, while you sleep, I lose all my knowledge and become like my blind brethren who do not yet know that on this earth there are as many hidden gods as there are hearts that throb . . . Alas, I am to them the genius to be avoided, the wicked sorcerer in league with their enemies! . . . They have no enemies, but only subjects who know not where to find their king . . . They are persuaded that my secret virtue, which is obeyed by the plants and the stars, by water, stone and fire and to which the future at times reveals some of its features: they are persuaded that this new and yet so human virtue is hidden in philtres, in horrible charms, in hellish herbs and awful signs . . . No, it is in myself, even as it resides in them; it is in you, my frail Arielle, in you who were once in me . . . I have taken two or three bolder steps in the dark . . . I have done a little earlier what they will do later . . . All things will be subject to them when they have learnt at last to revive your goodwill even as I have revived it . . . But it were vain for me to tell them that you are sleeping here and to point to your dazzling grace: they would not see you . . . Each one of them must find you within himself; each one of them must open as I do the tomb of his life and come to awake you as I awake you now . . . [He bends over ARIELLE and kisses her.]

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

ARIELLE

[Waking.] Master! . . .

MERLIN

This is the hour, Arielle, when love must watch . . . I shall often trouble your sleep in these coming days. . . .

ARIELLE

My sleep was so long that I am always relapsing into it; but I feel stronger and become happier at each new awakening that your thought imposes on me . . .

MERLIN

Whither are you taking my son and when shall I see him again? . . .

ARIELLE

I was following him with my eyes in my attentive dream . . . He is approaching us . . . He thinks that he is lost; and his destiny leads him where happiness awaits him . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Will he know me? It is many years since the prescribed proof exacted that we should live as strangers to each other; and I am eager to be able to embrace him as I did long ago, when he was a child . . .

ARIELLE

No, fate must be allowed to decide freely; nor may the proof be falsified by the love of a father of whose existence he must not know . . .

MERLIN

But now that Joyzelle is here, close to us; now that he is coming towards her, does the future become more clear, can you read further into it? . . .

ARIELLE

[Gazing upon the sea and the night, in a sort of trance.] I read in it what I read from the first moment . . . Your son's fate is wholly inscribed within a circle of love. If he love, if he be loved with a wondrous love, which should be that of all men, but which is becoming so rare that at present it seems to them a dazzling folly; if he love, if he be loved with an ingenuous and yet clear-seeing love, with a love simple and pure and all-powerful as the mountain stream, with an heroic love, yet one that shall be gentler than a flower, with a love which takes all and gives back more than it takes, which never hesitates, which is not deceived; a love which nothing disconcerts and nothing repels, a love which hears and sees naught save a mysterious happiness, invisible to all besides, which perceives it everywhere, in every form and every trial, and which, with a smile, will even commit crime to claim it . . . If he obtain that love, which exists somewhere and is waiting for him in a heart that I seem to have recognised, his life will be longer, fairer, and happier than that of other men. But, if he do not find it before the month is past, for the circle is closing; if Joyzelle's love be not that which the future holds out to him from the high skies; if the flame do not burn its full span, if a regret veil or a doubt obscure it, then death triumphs and your son is lost . . .

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Ay, for all men the hour of love is an important hour! . . .

ARIELLE

For Lancéor, alas, it is the inexorable hour! . . . Within these next few days, he will reach the summit of his life. With groping hands, he touches happiness and the tomb . . . He is dependent entirely on the last steps which he is taking and on the act of the virgin who is coming to meet him. . . .

MERLIN

And if Joyzelle be not she whom fate selects? . . .

ARIELLE

Indeed, I fear that the proof which we are about to attempt is the only one which it offers; but man must never lose courage in face of the future . . .

MERLIN

Why attempt the proof if it be uncertain? . . .

Joyzelle

ARIELLE

If we do not offer it, fate will offer it; it is inevitable, but it is left to chance; and that is why I try to direct its course . . .

MERLIN

And if he love Joyzelle and she do not love him with the love which fate demands? . . .

ARIELLE

Then we shall have to intervene more openly.

MERLIN

How?

ARIELLE

I will try to learn.

MERLIN

Arielle, I conjure you, as this concerns the dearest being, much dearer than myself; as I have only one son and he can become what we well know that I could never be: is it not possible to make an unexampled, an almost desperate effort with regard to the future; to violate time; to snatch from the years, even were they to revenge themselves upon us two, the secret which they conceal so strictly and which contains much more than our own life and our own happiness? . . .

Joyzelle

ARIELLE

No, strive as I may, I can reach no further . . . The future is a world limited by ourselves, in which we discover only that which concerns us and sometimes, by chance, that which interests those whom we love the most . . . I see very clearly all that unfolds itself round Lancéor, until his road meets Joyzelle's road. But around Joyzelle the years are veiled. It is an effulgent veil, a veil of light, but it hides the days as profoundly as a veil of darkness . . . It interrupts life. Then, beyond the veil, I again find happiness and death awaiting him, like two equal, indifferent, inscrutable hosts; and I cannot tell which is the nearer, the more imperious . . . It is not possible for me to know if Joyzelle is the predestined one . . . Everything promises that it is she, but nothing confirms it . . . Her face is stretched towards the coming years . . . and, call to her as I may, with all my might, she does not answer, does not turn her head. Nothing can distract her; and I have never seen her features, which I can only imagine . . . One sign alone is certain: it is that of the very sharp and cruel proofs which she will have to overcome . . . By these proofs alone we shall know her. . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

And therefore, starting from this point which I can surmount, we must submit to unknown powers, question facts like other men, await their reply and try to conquer them if they threaten harm to those whom we love . . .

ARIELLE

But here they come, in the breaking dawn . . . Let us hasten away; they are coming near . . . Let us leave to their destiny, which is beginning its work, the solitude and the silence which it demands.

[Exeunt MERLIN and ARIELLE. A few moments after, while the daylight swiftly increases, JOYZELLE and LANCÉOR enter from opposite sides and meet.]

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

[Stopping, astonished, before LANCÉOR]:
What are you seeking?

LANCÉOR

I do not know where I am . . . I was seeking a shelter . . . Who are you?

JOYZELLE

My name is Joyzelle.

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle . . . I am saying the name . . .
It is as caressing as a wing, the breath of a flower, a whisper of gladness, a ray of light
. . . It describes you completely, it sings in the heart, it lights the lips . . .

JOYZELLE

'And you, who are you?

LANCÉOR

I no longer myself know who I am . . .
'A few days ago, my name was Lancéor; I knew where I was and I knew myself . . .
To-day, I seek myself, I grope within myself

Joyzelle

and all around me, and I wander in the mist, amid mirages . . .

JOYZELLE

What mist? What mirages? . . . How long have you been on this island? . . .

LANCÉOR

Since yesterday . . .

JOYZELLE

Strange, they did not tell me . . .

LANCÉOR

No one saw me . . . I was wandering on the shore, I was in despair . . .

JOYZELLE

Oh! Why? . . .

LANCÉOR

I was very far from here, I was very far from him, when a letter told me that my old father was dying . . . I took ship at once.
We were long at sea ; then, in the first port at which the ship put in, I learnt that it was too late, that my father was no more. . . . I continued my voyage, at least to be on the scene of his last thoughts and carry out his last wishes. . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Why are you here?

LANCÉOR

Why? I do not know, nor do I know how. . . . The sea was very still and the sky was clear. . . . We saw only the water slumbering in the azure. . . . Suddenly, without warning, the waves were invaded by thick blue mists. . . . They rose like a veil, which clung to our hands, to the rigging, to our faces. . . . Then the wind blew, our anchor broke loose and the blind ship, driven by a current that made her timbers creak, arrived towards evening in the unknown harbour of this unexpected island. . . . Sad and disheartened, I landed on the beach; I fell asleep in a cave overlooking the sea; and, when I awoke, the fog had lifted and I saw the ship disappear like a radiant wing on the horizon of the waves.

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

What had happened?

LANCÉOR

I do not know. . . . I would have tried to follow her, but I could find no boat in the harbour. . . . I must wait, therefore, until another vessel passes. . . .

JOYZELLE

That is curious. . . . It is like myself. . . .

LANCÉOR

Like you? . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes, I too came to the island through a thick fog. . . . But I was shipwrecked. . . .

LANCÉOR

When was that? And how? . . . Where do you come from, Joyzelle? . . .

JOYZELLE

I was coming from another island. . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Where were you going?

JOYZELLE

Where some one was awaiting me. . . .

LANCÉOR

Who?

JOYZELLE

One whom they had thought right to choose for me. . . .

LANCÉOR

Were you betrothed? . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes.

LANCÉOR

Do you love him? . . .

JOYZELLE

No.

LANCÉOR

But then? . . .

JOYZELLE

My mother wished it. . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Do you intend to obey her?

JOYZELLE

No.

LANCÉOR

Ah, that is well! . . . I like that! . . . And my father, at the moment of his death, wished that I also should choose her whom he had chosen for me. . . . He had his reasons, very deep and serious reasons, it appears. . . . And, as he wished it and as he is no longer alive, I must obey him. . . .

JOYZELLE

Why?

LANCÉOR

We cannot evade the wishes of the dead.

JOYZELLE

Why?

LANCÉOR

They can no longer be altered. . . . We must have pity, we must respect them. . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

No . . .

LANCÉOR

You would not obey? . . .

JOYZELLE

No.

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle! . . . This is horrible! . . .

JOYZELLE

No, the dead are horrible, if they want us to love those whom we do not love . . .

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle! . . . I am afraid of you . . .

JOYZELLE

I said . . . What did I say? . . . Perhaps I was too quick . . .

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle, your eyes are moist at the thought of the dead and belie your words . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

No, it is not for them . . . Perhaps I was harsh . . . And yet, they are wrong.

LANCÉOR

Let us speak no more of the dead . . . You have not told me how your shipwreck . . .

JOYZELLE

We lost our way in a thick fog . . . 'A' fog so thick that it filled our hands, like white feathers . . . The pilot mistook the course . . . He thought he saw a beacon . . . The ship struck upon a hidden reef . . . But no one perished . . . The waves bore me away; and then I saw the blue water glide before my eyes as though I were sinking in a stifling sky . . . I went down and down . . . Then some one caught hold of me and I lost consciousness . . .

LANCÉOR

Who caught hold of you? . . .

JOYZELLE

The lord of this island.

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

And who is this lord? . . .

JOYZELLE

He is an old man who wanders like a restless shade about this marble palace . . .

LANCÉOR

If I had been there! . . .

JOYZELLE

What would you have done? . . .

LANCÉOR

I should have saved you! . . .

JOYZELLE

Was I not saved? . . .

LANCÉOR

It is not the same thing! . . . You would not have suffered, nothing would have come to you . . . I should have carried you on the crest of the waves . . . Ah, I do not know how . . . Like a cup full of precious pearls, of which not one must be touched by a shadow; like a flower of the dawn, from which we fear to shake a single dew-drop . . . When I think of the dangers which you, so fair, so fragile, ran among the cruel rocks, in that old man's arms! . . . What he did was fine; he did the impossible . . . But it was not enough . . . How did you reach the shore at last? . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

I awoke lying on the sands . . . The old man was there. Then he had me carried to this palace . . .

LANCÉOR

Is he king of this island? . . .

JOYZELLE

The island is almost desert, one sees none but a few servants who move about in silence . . . He can have for his subjects only the trees, the flowers and the happy birds with which the island seems filled . . .

LANCÉOR

What he did was well done . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

He is good and kind; and he received me as my father himself could not have received me . . . Yet I do not like him . . .

LANCÉOR

Why?

JOYZELLE

I believe he loves me . . .

LANCÉOR

What! . . . He dares! . . . No, it is not possible, or else the years no longer have the weight they should have and reason escapes us when death draws near . . .

JOYZELLE

And yet I fear it . . . He gave me to understand . . . He is strange and sad . . . They say he has a son who is very far from here, who is lost, perhaps . . . He is always thinking of him . . . When he thinks that he will see him again, his face lights up, he . . . Here he is! . . .

[Enter MERLIN.]

Joyzelle

MERLIN

I was looking for you, Joyzelle . . .
[Turning to Lancéor, with a threatening glance.] As for you, I know who you are and I know the reasons that have brought you to this island, the trick of this pretended shipwreck and the name of the enemy who sent you . . .

LANCÉOR

Me? . . . But it was a mere accident that flung me on this coast . . .

MERLIN

Let us waste no phrases.

JOYZELLE

What has he done?

MERLIN

He intended, alas, to do the basest thing that man can do: to betray kindness, deceive friendship and sell to the enemy the too generous host who was going to welcome him . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

No!

MERLIN

Why? Do you know him?

JOYZELLE

Yes.

MERLIN

Since when?

JOYZELLE

Since I first saw him.

MERLIN

And when did you see him?

JOYZELLE

When he entered this room . . .

MERLIN

That is hardly . . .

JOYZELLE

It is enough.

MERLIN

No, Joyzelle, and soon proofs and facts will show you that it is not enough and that an honest look, an innocent smile and ingenious words often conceal more dangerous snares than those of thankless old age or of love that has but little hope . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

What do you mean to do?

MERLIN

I am waiting for the last certainty; and then I shall do what it is lawful and necessary to do to remove all fear of an enemy who would stop at nothing. The pitiless measures which I shall take concern your safety as much as my own; for the same plot surrounds us both and we are united by fate . . . I can tell you no more to-day; have confidence in me; perhaps you already know that your happiness is mine . . .

JOYZELLE

You saved my life, I remember that . . .

MERLIN

You remember it without any kindliness;

Joyzelle

but I hope that one day you will do me justice . . . [To LANCÉOR] As for you, go! The information which I have received is not open to doubt. When the facts which I fear have confirmed it, I shall act. Meanwhile, you are my prisoner. You will be shown the part of the palace reserved for you. If you go beyond the limits laid down, you become your own judge and pronounce your own sentence. There will be no appeal. Go, my orders are given . . .

LANCÉOR

I obey, but only until you recognise your error. We shall meet soon, Joyzelle . . .

MERLIN

No, bid her farewell; for it is doubtful if you will ever see her again . . . Nevertheless, Joyzelle, chance may bring you again in this man's presence. In that case, fly from him; your life and his depend most strictly on your prompt flight. If I learn that you have seen each other, you are irrevocably lost . . . [To LANCÉOR] Do you promise to fly from her?

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

If her life is at stake, yes.

MERLIN

'And you, Joyzelle?'

JOYZELLE

No.

CURTAIN

ACT II

*(A wild, neglected garden, full of weeds and brambles. On the right, a very high and gloomy wall, pierced by a railed gate.
JOYZELLE is discovered in the garden, alone.)*

JOYZELLE

THIS is the garden which no one visits. The sun does not enter here; the poor wild flowers upon which men wage war because they are not beautiful here await death; and the birds are silent. Here are the violet, which has lost its perfume, the trembling, shaking buttercup and the scarlet poppy, which sheds its petals without ceasing . . . Here are the scabious begging for a little water, the deadly spurge hiding its green blossoms, the blue campanula silently shaking its useless bells . . . I know you all, you humble and despised flowers, so good and so ugly! . . . You could be beautiful; it needs scarce anything: a ray of happiness, a minute's grace, a bolder smile to attract the bee . . . But no eye sees you, no hand sows you, no hand gathers you; and I have come among you to be also alone . . . How gloomy everything looks! . . . The grass is neglected and parched, the leaves are sick, the old trees dying; and spring itself and the dew of dawn are afraid lest they should grow sorrowful in this solitude . . . [LANCÉOR appears behind the railed gate.]

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle! . . .

JOYZELLE

Lancéor! . . .

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle! . . .

JOYZELLE

Go away! . . . Go away! . . . Take care! . . . It is death if he sees you! . . .

LANCÉOR

He will not see us; he is very far from here.

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Where is he? . . .

LANCÉOR

I saw him go away. I watched his departure from the top of that tower in which I am a prisoner . . . He is at the other end of the island, near the blue forest that shuts in the horizon . . .

JOYZELLE

But he may return; or some one will tell him . . . Go away, go away, I tell you! . . . Your life is at stake! . . .

LANCÉOR

The palace is deserted; I have gone through the rooms, the gardens and the courts, the long box hedges, the marble staircases . . .

JOYZELLE

Go away, it is only a trap . . . He has a design upon your life; I know it, he said so . . . He suspects that I love you . . . He is only seeking an excuse for what he would like to do . . . Go away! . . . As it is, you have done too much . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

No.

JOYZELLE

If you do not go away, then I shall go . . .

LANCÉOR

If you go, Joyzelle, I shall remain at this gate until night brings him back to the palace. . . . He will find me on this forbidden threshold . . . I have passed the limits assigned to me; I have therefore disobeyed him; and I wish him to see it and I wish him to know it! . . .

JOYZELLE

Lancéor, have pity! I entreat you, Lancéor! . . . You are risking all our happiness! . . . Do not think only of yourself! . . . I will go where you please, if you will leave that gate! . . . We shall see each other elsewhere, later, another day . . . We must choose the time, we must take care, we must make our preparations . . . See, I am stretching out my arms to you . . . what would you have me do? . . . What must I promise you? . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Open the gate.

JOYZELLE

No, no, no, I cannot . . .

LANCÉOR

Open, open, Joyzelle, if you would have me live . . .

JOYZELLE

Why do you wish me to open? . . .

LANCÉOR

I want to see you closer, I want to touch your hands which I have not yet touched, to look at you once more as I looked at you on the first day . . . Open, or I am determined to be undone; I shall not go away . . .

JOYZELLE

Will you go away then? . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

I promise you, Joyzelle . . . As soon as you open the gate, before a swallow, before a thought has time to hasten from wherever it may be to surprise my hand as it touches yours . . . I beseech you, Joyzelle: this is too cruel . . . I am standing at this gate like a blind beggar . . . I can see only your shadow moving among the leaves . . . These bars are hateful and hide your face . . . One look alone, Joyzelle, in which I shall see you wholly; and then I will go, like a robber flying with a great treasure dragging noisily behind him . . . No one will know and we shall be happy . . .

JOYZELLE

Lancéor, this is terrible! . . . I never tremble, but I am trembling to-day . . . Perhaps it means your life; and it already means mine . . . What is that light which rises so quickly? . . . It has come to threaten us, it is going to betray us! . . .

LANCÉOR

No, no, it is the sun rising behind the wall . . . It is the innocent sun, the good May sun, which has come to delight us . . . Open, then, open quickly: each minute that passes adds its dangers to the dangers which you fear . . . A single movement, Joyzelle; a turn of your hand; and you really open the gates of life to me! [JOYZELLE turns the key; the gate opens; LANCÉOR crosses the threshold.] [Taking JOYZELLE in his arms.] Joyzelle! . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

JOYZELLE

I am here! . . .

LANCÉOR

I hold your hands and your eyes, your hair and your lips, in the same kiss and at the same moment, all the gifts of love which I have never had and all its presence! . . . My arms are so surprised that they cannot carry them; and my whole life cannot contain them . . . Do not turn away your face, do not draw back your lips! . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

It is not to escape you, but to be closer to you . . .

LANCÉOR

Do not turn your head ; do not deprive me of a shadow of your lashes, a gleam of your eyes : it is not the hours, but the very minutes that threaten our happiness . . .

JOYZELLE

I was seeking your smile . . .

LANCÉOR

And your own meets mine in the first kiss that passes between our lips to unite our destinies . . . It seems to me to-day as though I had always seen you and always clasped you and as though I were repeating, in reality, on the threshold of paradise, what I did on earth when embracing your shadow . . .

JOYZELLE

I used to embrace you at night when I embraced my dreams . . .

LANCÉOR

I knew no doubt . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

I knew no fear . . .

LANCÉOR

And everything is granted me . . .

JOYZELLE

'And everything makes me happy! . . .

LANCÉOR

How deep your eyes are and how full of confidence! . . .

JOYZELLE

'And how clear are yours and full of certainty! . . .

LANCÉOR

How well I recognise them? . . .

JOYZELLE

And how well I know yours! . . .

LANCÉOR

Your hands rest on my shoulders just as when I lay waiting for them without daring to wake . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

And your arm is round my neck just as it was . . .

LANCÉOR

It was thus that your eyelids used to close at the breath of love . . .

JOYZELLE

And it was thus, too, that the tears came to your eyes when they opened . . .

LANCÉOR

When happiness is so great . . .

JOYZELLE

Unhappiness does not come so long as love binds it . . .

LANCÉOR

Do you love me? . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes . . .

LANCÉOR

Oh, how you said 'yes'! . . . 'Yes' from the depths of your heart, from the depths of your thought, from the depths of your very soul! . . . I knew it, perhaps; but it had to be said; and our kisses themselves did not count without it . . . Now it is enough, it will feed my life; all the hatred on earth could not wipe it away nor thirty years of distress exhaust it! . . . I am in the light and the spring overwhelms me! . . . I look up to the sky and the garden awakens! . . . Do you hear the birds making the trees sing and repeating your smile and that wonderful 'yes'; and do you see the rays that caress your hair like diamonds sparkling among the flames and the thousands of flowers that bend over us to surprise in our eyes the mystery of a love which they did not know? . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

[Opening her eyes.] There was nothing here but poor, dead flowers . . .

[She looks around her, stupefied; for, since Lancéor's entrance, without their noticing it, the gloomy garden has become gradually transfigured by magic. The wild plants, the weeds that poisoned it, have grown, and each, according to its kind, has increased its flowers, blossoming to a prodigious size. The puny bindweed has become a powerful creeper, whose wonderful blossoms engarland the trees weighed down with ripe fruits and peopled with marvellous birds. The white pimpernel is now a tall shrub of a warm and tender green, with bursting flowers larger than lilies. The pale scabious has lengthened its stalks, from which spring tufts like mauve heliotrope. . . . Butterflies flit to and fro, the bees hum, the birds sing, the fruits swing and fall, the light streams down. The perspective of the garden has become infinitely extended; and the audience now sees, to the right, a marble basin, half-hidden behind a hedge of oleanders and turnsoles cut into arches.]

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

There is nothing here now but the flowers of life! . . . Look! . . . They are coming down, they are streaming down upon us! . . .

Joyzelle

They are bursting on the branches, they bend the trees, they entangle our steps, they press against one another, they crush one another, they open out wide, one within the other, they blind the leaves, they dazzle the grass; I know none of them and the spring is drunk; I have never seen flowers so disordered, so resplendent! . . .

JOYZELLE

Where are we? . . .

LANCÉOR

We are in the garden which you would not open to my love . . .

JOYZELLE

What have we done?

LANCÉOR

I have given the kiss that is given but once; and you have spoken the word that is never respoken . . .

JOYZELLE

[Swooning.] Lancéor, I am mad, or else we are going to die . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

[Supporting her.] Joyzelle, you are turning pale and your dear arms are pressing me as though you feared that a hidden enemy . . .

JOYZELLE

Have you not seen it? . . .

LANCÉOR

What?

JOYZELLE

We are caught in a trap and those flowers are betraying us . . . The birds were silent, the trees were dead, there was nothing here but weeds, which no one dug up . . . I recognize them all and remember their names, which still remind me of their former wretchedness . . . Here is the buttercup, laden with golden disks; the poor pale pimpernel is changed into a bush of lilies; the tall scabious are dropping their petals over our heads; and those purple bells, which shoot up over the wall to tell to the world that they have seen us, are the foxglove, which was pining in the shade . . . It is as though the sky had shed its flowers . . . Do not look at them; they are here to ruin us . . . Ah, I am wrong to seek and I should have understood! . . . He muttered confused threats . . . Yes, yes, I knew he had spells at his command . . . They told me so one day, but I did not believe them . . . Now it is his time; it is well, it is too late; but perhaps we shall see that love also knows . . . [A horn sounds.]

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Hark! . . .

JOYZELLE

It is the horses' hoofs and the horn sounding the recall. He is returning. Fly! . . .

LANCÉOR

But you? . . .

JOYZELLE

I have nothing to fear but his hateful love . . . Go! . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

I will stay with you; and, if his violence . . .

JOYZELLE

You will ruin us both . . . Go! . . .
Hide there, behind those spurges . . .
Whatever he may say, whatever he may do, do not show yourself and fear nothing for me: I shall know how to defend myself . . .
Go! . . . He is coming! . . . Go! . . . I hear his voice . . .

[LANCÉOR hides behind a cluster of tall spurges. The railed gate opens and MERLIN enters the garden.]

MERLIN

Is he here, Joyzelle? . . .

JOYZELLE

No.

MERLIN

Those flowers do not lie; they inform against love . . . They were your keepers and have been faithful to me . . . I am not cruel and I forgive more than once . . . You can save him by pointing to the bush which hides him . . . [JOYZELLE stands motionless.] Do not look at me with those eyes of hatred . . . You will love me one day, for love goes by dark and generous paths . . . Do you not believe that I will keep my promises? . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

No! . . .

MERLIN

I have done nothing, Joyzelle, to deserve such hatred or such an insult . . . Since you wish it, I will let fate take its course . . .

[A cry of pain is heard from behind the cluster of spurges.]

JOYZELLE

[Rushing behind the cluster.] Lancéor! . . .

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle! . . . I am hurt . . . An adder has stung me . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

. It is not an adder . . . It is a horrible animal . . . It is lifting itself against you! . . . Let me crush it underfoot . . . It is foaming . . . It is dead. . . . Lancéor, you are turning pale! . . . Lean on my neck . . . Fear nothing, I am strong . . . Show me your wound . . . Lancéor, I am here . . . Lancéor, answer me! . . .

MERLIN

[Approaching them and examining the bite.] The wound is mortal . . . The poison is very slow and its action is strange . . . Do not despair . . . I alone know the remedy . . .

JOYZELLE

Lancéor! Lancéor! Answer me! Answer me! . . .

MERLIN

He will not answer, he is sound asleep . . . Withdraw, Joyzelle, unless you wish this mere sleep to end in the grave . . . Withdraw, Joyzelle: you will not be betraying him; you will be warding off death . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

First make the sign that shall restore him to life!

MERLIN

[Looking at her gravely.] I will make the sign, Joyzelle. [JOYZELLE exit slowly, turns back and withdraws at last, before a grave and imperious gesture from MERLIN. MERLIN, left alone with LANCÉOR, kneels down beside him to dress his wound.] There, have no fear, my son, there, it is for your happiness; and may all my heart open in the first kiss that I am able to give you. [He embraces him long and fervently. Enter ARIELLE.]

ARIELLE

Master, we must hasten and lay the new trap.

MERLIN

Will he fall into it?

ARIELLE

Man always falls into a trap, when his instinct leads him; but let us veil his reason, let us change his character; we shall behold a sight that will make us smile . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

I shall not smile, for the sight is a sad one and I do not like to see a noble and beautiful love, a love that believes itself predestined and unparalleled, thus reduced to nothing, at the first proof, in the arms of a phantom . . .

ARIELLE

Lancéor is not free, for he is no longer himself and I have abandoned him to his instinct during the past hour . . .

MERLIN

He ought to have conquered it . . .

ARIELLE

You speak like that because I am submissive: but remember the time when I was less docile.

MERLIN

You think yourself very docile because I have conquered you; but you retain some shadow even in the light in which I have been able to train you and I find in you a certain cruelty that takes too great a pleasure in men's weaknesses . . .

Joyzelle

ARIELLE

Men's weaknesses are often necessary to the purposes of life . . .

MERLIN

What will happen if he yields? . . .

ARIELLE

He will yield: it is written. The question is if Joyzelle's love will surmount the proof.

MERLIN

And do you not know?

ARIELLE

No; she has a mind which is not wholly within my sphere, which depends upon a principle which I do not know, which I have never seen except in her and which changes the future . . . I have tried to subdue her; but she obeys me only in little things. But it is time to act. Go and find Joyzelle and leave your son to me . . . Go, lest you should spoil the proof . . . I shall revive him, I shall renew and make still deeper and blinder the intoxication into which I have plunged him; and I shall become visible to his eyes in order to deceive his kisses . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

[In a voice of smiling reproach.] Arielle . . .

ARIELLE

Go, let me be . . . You know that kisses given to poor Arielle pass like the flash of a wing that closes over running water . . .

[MERLIN retires to a distance. ARIELLE goes towards the marble basin; and there, half-hidden behind the hedge of oleanders, she half opens the veils that cover her, sits on the grassy steps that surround the basin and slowly unties her long hair, while LANCÉOR awakes, groping with his hands.]

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Where did I fall asleep? Some strange poison has entered my heart . . . I am no longer the same and my mind is wandering . . . I am struggling against the intoxication and I do not know where I am going . . . [Catches sight of ARIELLE.] But who is that woman behind the oleanders? [Approaching the hedge and looking.] She is beautiful! . . . She is half unclad and her curved foot, like a prudent flower, is trying the water, which smiles and encircles it with pearls . . . She raises her arms to bind her hair; and the light of the sky glides between her shoulders, like gleaming water over marble wings. [Approaching closer.] She is beautiful, she is beautiful! . . . I must see her . . . She is turning round and one of her bare breasts, peeping through her tresses, adds rays to the rays that strike it . . . She is listening, she hears; and her wide-open eyes are questioning the roses . . . She has seen me, she hides herself, she is going to fly . . . [Passing through the hedge.] No, no, do not fly from me! . . . I have seen you . . . It is too late! . . . [Taking ARIELLE in his arms.] I want to know the name of so pure a vision, which plunges into darkness all that I have loved! . . . I want to know also what too faithful shadow, what profound retreat concealed the marvel which I hold in my arms! . . . What trees, what caves, what towers, what walls were able to stifle the brilliancy of that flesh, the fragrance of that life, the fire of those eyes? . . . Where were you hiding, you whom even a blind man would find without difficulty in a holiday crowd? . . . No, do not thrust me away: this is not the passion, the intoxication of a moment; it is the lasting dizziness of love! . . . I am at your knees; I humbly embrace them . . . I give myself to you alone . . . I am only yours . . . I ask for nothing but a kiss from your lips to forget the rest and seal the future . . . Bow down your head . . . I see it bending towards me, I see it consenting; and I call for the token which nothing can efface henceforth . . . [He kisses her passionately. A cry of distress is heard from behind the bushes.] What is it? . . .

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

[ARIELLE releases herself from his embrace, flies and disappears. Enter JOYZELLE.]

JOYZELLE

[Dismayed.] Lancéor! . . .

LANCÉOR

Why, where do you come from, Joyzelle?

JOYZELLE

I have seen and heard . . .

LANCÉOR

Well, what? . . . What have you seen? . . . Look around you: there is nothing to see . . . The oleanders are in flower, the water in the basin sleeps, the doves are cooing, the water-lilies are opening their petals: that is all that I see, all that you can see . . .

JOYZELLE

Do you love her?

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Whom? . . .

JOYZELLE

The woman who has just fled.

LANCÉOR

How should I love her? . . . I had never seen her . . . The woman was there; I happened to pass . . . She gave a loud scream . . . I ran up . . . She seemed to have lost her footing and, as I held out my hand to her, she gave me the kiss which you heard . . .

JOYZELLE

Is it really you speaking? . . .

LANCÉOR

Yes, look at me: it is really and wholly I . . . Come nearer, touch me if you doubt it . . .

JOYZELLE

The proof was terrible; but this is mortal . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

What? . . .

JOYZELLE

Was this the first time that you saw that woman? . . .

LANCÉOR

Yes.

JOYZELLE

I shall not speak of it again . . . I shall understand, perhaps; in any case, I forgive . . .

LANCÉOR

There is nothing to forgive.

JOYZELLE

What do you say? . . .

LANCÉOR

I say that I have no need for the pardon with which you overwhelm a fault which I have not committed.

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Which you have not committed? . . .
Then I did not see what I saw nor hear what I heard? . . .

LANCÉOR

No.

JOYZELLE

Lancéor! . . .

LANCÉOR

Lancéor! Lancéor! . . . If you called me by my name for a thousand years and more, it would alter nothing in what was nothing! . . .

JOYZELLE

I do not know what is passing between your happiness and mine . . . Oh, look at me and touch my hands, that I may know where you are! . . . Oh, if you speak like that, then it was not you whom I saw this morning in the wonderful garden where I gave away my soul! . . . No, there is something that is mocking our strength . . .
It is not possible that all is thus lost because of a single word . . . I am seeking, I am all astray . . . I saw you, then, and saw all truth and all trust, as one suddenly sees the sea between the trees! . . . I was sure, I knew . . . Love did not deceive me . . . It deceives me now! . . . It cannot be that all this should crumble away for a yea or a nay . . . No, no, I will not have it! . . . Come, it is not too late; we have not yet lost our happiness . . . It is all in our hands, which close upon it. . . . What you have just done was mad, perhaps . . . I forget it, I laugh at it, I saw nothing, I tell you! . . . It does not exist: you can wipe it out with a word . . . You well know, as I do, that love has words which nothing can resist and that the greatest fault, when confessed in a loyal kiss, becomes a truth more beautiful than innocence . . . Speak that word to me; give me that kiss: confess the truth, confess what I saw, what I heard; and all will again be pure as it was and I shall recover all that you gave me . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

I have said what I have said; if you do not believe me, go away, you annoy me . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Look me in the face . . . Do you love her, since you lie like that? . . .

LANCÉOR

No, I love no one; and you less than the others . . .

JOYZELLE

Lancéor! . . . What have I done? . . . Perhaps, without knowing . . .

LANCÉOR

Nothing; it is not that . . . But I am not what you thought and I do not care to be . . . I am like other men; I wish you to know it and make the best of it . . . I want all our promises to be scattered to the wind of some new dream, like this dead leaf which I crumple in my hand . . . Ah, the love of women! . . . Well, so much the worse for them! . . . I shall live like other men in a faithless world, where no one loves, where all oaths yield to the first test . . . Ah, tears! . . . They were bound to come, I expected them! . . . You are hard, I know, and your tears are scarce . . . I count them drop by drop! . . . You did not love me! . . . Love which comes thus, at the first call, is not that on which happiness is based . . . In any case, it is not that which I hoped for . . . More tears! . . . They flow too late! . . . You did not love me, I did not love you . . . Another would have said . . . Ah, another would have known! . . . But you, no, no; go away! . . . Go away, go away, I say! . . .

Joyzelle

[JOYZELLE moves away silently, sobbing. When she has taken a few steps, she turns back, hesitates, looks sadly at LANCÉOR and disappears with a suppressed cry, "I love you! . . ." LANCÉOR, overwhelmed, bewildered, staggers away and leans against the trunk of a tree.]

LANCÉOR

What have I done? . . . I am obeying . . . what? . . . I do not know . . . What have I said? . . . It is not I speaking . . . I have lost happiness, the present, the future . . . I am no longer my own master . . . I do what I hate to do . . . I do not know who I am . . . Joyzelle! . . .

Joyzelle

Ah, my Joyzelle! . . .

[He falls, sobbing, with his face to the ground.]

CURTAIN

ACT III

A Room in the Palace

(LANCÉOR is discovered before a mirror. He appears emaciated, bent, aged, unrecognisable.)

LANCÉOR

WHO am I? In a few hours I have aged thirty years . . . The poison is doing its work and sorrow too . . . I see myself with terror in this mirror which shows me the wreck of myself . . . Yet it does not lie. [Going to another mirror.] For here is another that says the same thing . . . unless they all lie, just as everything seems to lie and to mock at me in this extraordinary island. [He feels his face.] Alas, they are right! . . . These wrinkles which my hand follows are not formed by their malevolent crystal . . . They are in my flesh! . . . And these hideous blemishes which will not come away, I feel them under my fingers . . . These bent shoulders refuse to straighten themselves; my hair is colourless, like pale ashes after the flame has died away; my eyes, even my eyes hardly recognise themselves . . . They used to open, to laugh, to welcome life . . . Now they blink and their glances avoid me like the glances of a knave . . . Not a thing remains to me of what I was; my mother would pass by me and not see me . . . It is finished . . . [Drawing the curtain of a tall window.] Let us hide ourselves; let complete dusk cover all this! . . . [He lies down in a dark corner of the room.] I give up, I consent . . . I have done what love can never forgive . . . I am losing my life at last, as I have lost Joyzelle . . . She will not see me again, I shall not see her again . . .

Joyzelle

[A door opens. Enter JOYZELLE.]

JOYZELLE

[Surprised by the darkness, she stands a moment on the threshold. Then, casting her eyes around the room, she perceives LANCÉOR lying in a corner and rushes towards him with outstretched arms.] LANCÉOR! . . . Ah, these last three days I have lived like a mad thing! I looked for you everywhere. I went to the tower. . . . The doors were closed, the windows too. I crouched on the sill to catch a glimpse of your shadow, I called, I screamed, no one answered. . . . But how pale you are, how thin! . . . I am talking to you without thinking. . . . Give me your two hands. . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

You know me? . . .

JOYZELLE

Why not?

LANCÉOR

But then I am not? . . . I am still myself? . . . Look at me! . . . What trace of me remains? . . . [Going to the window and tearing aside the curtain.] Look! Look!

Joyzelle

. . . What do you know me by? . . . Tell me, is it here? . . . Is it my hands, my eyes, my clothes, perhaps? . . .

JOYZELLE

[Looking at him and throwing herself, weeping, in his arms.] Oh, how you have suffered! . . .

LANCÉOB

I have suffered, yes, I have suffered! . . . I deserved it but too well, after what I said, after what I did! . . . But that is not what matters or overwhelms me . . . I would willingly die, if you could but see once more, were it only for the flash of an eye, that which you once loved . . . I cling to myself, to the little that remains of me . . . I should like to hide myself, to bury my distress; and yet I want you to see me first, so that you may know at last what you would have to love, if you still loved me . . . Come, come, nearer, nearer . . . Not nearer to me, but nearer to the rays that shine upon my wretchedness . . . Look at these wrinkles, these dead eyes, these lips

Joyzelle

. . . No, no, do not approach, lest disgust . . . I am less like myself than if I had returned from a world which life had never visited . . . You do not recoil? You are not astonished? . . . You do not see me as these mirrors see me? . . .

JOYZELLE

I see that you are pale and that you seem tired . . . Do not put away my arms . . . Bring your face closer . . . Why not let me put my lips to it, as I did when all things smiled to us in the garden of flowers? . . . Love knows many days when nothing smiles What matter, if it be there to smile when we weep? . . . I am pushing back your hair which hid your face and made it look so sad . . . See, it is just like that which I pushed back in our first kiss . . . Come, come, do not think about the lies of the mirrors . . . They do not know what they say; but love knows . . . Already life is returning to those eyes which see me again . . . Have no fear, for I have none . . . I know what we must do and I shall have the secret that will cure your pain . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle! . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes, yes, come nearer; I love you more dearly than at the happy moment when all united us . . .

LANCÉOR

Ah, I understand that; but the other, the other thing! . . .

JOYZELLE

What thing?

LANCÉOR

I understand that one can find one's love in ruins, that one can gather up its remnants and love them still . . . But where are the remnants of our love? Nothing is left of it; for, before fate struck me as you see, I had crushed out of existence all that it could not destroy . . . I have lied and deceived; and, at the very moment when the least lie begins again in a sphere where nothing is wiped out, a fault which love might have pardoned . . . Truth is dead in our one heart . . . I have lost the confidence in which all my thoughts surrounded your thoughts, even as a transparent water surrounds a still clearer water . . . I myself no longer believe in it, I no longer believe in myself; I have nothing pure left into which you can bend to find my shadow; and my soul is even sadder than my body . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Did you kiss that woman? . . .

LANCÉOR

Yes.

JOYZELLE

Did she call you? . . .

LANCÉOR

No.

JOYZELLE

And why did you say that I was mistaken? . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

What good would it be to tell you, Joyzelle? It is too late . . . You would not believe me, for you would have to believe the incredible . . . I was walking in a trance, in a sort of invincible, mocking dream . . . My mind, my reason, my will were all further from themselves than is this shattered body from what it was . . . I would have liked to tell you, to shout to you again and again that I was a lie that had escaped control and that the shameful speeches that defiled my lips stifled, in spite of myself, the tearful confession and the ardent words of desperate love that were leaping towards you . . . I made efforts fit to burst my throat, to break my heart; and I heard my faithless voice betray me; and my arms, my hands, my eyes, my kisses were powerless to disown it; for, except my soul, which you did not see, I felt myself a prey to a hostile force, irresistible, alas, and incomprehensible! . . .

JOYZELLE

But ah, I did see it! . . . And I knew at once that it was not you that were lying;

Joyzelle

that it was impossible . . .

LANCÉOR

How did you know? . . .

JOYZELLE

Because I love you. . . .

LANCÉOR

But what am I, Joyzelle, what do you love in me, in whom I have profaned and others destroyed all that you once loved? . . .

JOYZELLE

You.

LANCÉOR

What remains of me? . . . Not these hands, which have lost their strength; not these eyes, which no longer have their brightness; not this heart, which has betrayed love . . .

JOYZELLE

It is you and still you and none but you yourself! . . . What matter who you are, so long as I find you! . . . Oh, I cannot tell how to explain that! . . . When one loves as I love you, she is blind and deaf, because she looks beyond and listens elsewhere . . . When she loves as I love you, it is not what he says, it is not what he does, it is not what he is that she loves in the man she loves: it is he and only he, who remains the same, through the passing years and troubles . . . It is he alone, it is you alone, in whom no change can come but that which increases love . . . He who is all in you, you who are all in him, whom I see, whom I hear, to whom I listen incessantly and whom I love always . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle! . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes, yes, embrace me, crush me in your arms! . . . We have to struggle, we shall have to suffer; we are here in a world that seems full of snares . . . We are only two, but we are all love! . . .

Joyzelle

SCENE II

(A grove. JOYZELLE lies sleeping on a grassy bank, before a box hedge, cut into arches, in which lilies are flowering. It is night. A fountain ripples gently. The moon is shining.)

[Enter ARIELLE.]

ARIELLE

She sleeps . . . The breaths of the garden are hushed around her to listen to her breath; and the nightingale alone, deputed by the night which bathes her in silver, comes to soothe her slumbers . . . How beautiful and peaceful she is; and how pure she looks, a thousand times purer than the water that trickles yonder, flowing from the glaciers, in the snowy whiteness that sings under the pale leaves! . . . Her sweet hair lies spread like a flood of motionless light; and the moon cannot tell to whom belongs the gold that mingles with the azure in which its beams float . . . Her bright eyes are closed; and yet the light that falls from the stars tremulously raises her loving eyelids to seek beneath them the last memory of the fair day that is past . . . Her mouth is a moist, breathing flower; and the lilies have poured dew-drops on her bare shoulder, to give her her share of the pearls which night distributes in silence, in the name of the heavens that open over the treasure of the worlds . . . Ah, Joyzelle, Joyzelle! I am but a phantom lost in the night, more lost than you, for all my clear-sightedness, and nearer the tomb where happiness expires . . . I am not my own mistress; I obey my master, I can give nothing but an invisible kiss, which cannot wake you and is not even mine . . . But I love you, I love you, as a less happy sister loves her whom love has chosen first . . . I love you, I encompass you with all the powers that are not named in the prayers of men; and I would that my master had met you earlier, before fate, which hurries forward that incomparable hour, had fixed the tearful future that awaits him and awaits me with him . . . I spread my powerless, troubled affection over your calm sleep . . . Here is the only kiss that I can give you . . . Ah, why does not he of whom I am but the unconscious and docile shadow come himself to lay it on your lips, which call to mine even as all that is beautiful calls to mystery! . . . [She kisses JOYZELLE on the forehead.]

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

[In her sleep.] Lancéor! . . .

ARIELLE

One more . . . The last, even as we drink of the well defended by the angels who keep the secrets of time and space, the well at whose brink we shall never rest again . . .

JOYZELLE

[Sleeping, talking as in a dream.] Is that you, Lancéor? . . . How sweet your lips are at the breath of dawn! . . . I sink beneath the flowers that fall from paradise . . .

ARIELLE

Faithful in sleep and constant in her dreams! . . . The demons of the night will steal nothing from the love that fills the past and future of a heart! . . . Ah, my master and father! . . . It is she whom your only hope awaited, in vain, to avert the fate that threatens your old age! . . . O master, if you be willing, there is yet time; and happiness is here: you have but to gather it! . . . It sways uncertain between your son and you; a gesture would be enough to fix it upon ourselves . . . Come hither, she is yours! . . . Come, come, come, I am calling you . . . I know that I am right and that man must not renounce life and ruin himself to save those whom he loves . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

[In the distance, in a voice of grave reproach.] Arielle! . . .

[He enters, wrapped in a long cloak.]

ARIELLE

I am speaking for you and my voice is your voice . . . I speak in the name of your heart, which loves deeply and dares not confess it . . . You had, at this prescribed moment, to meet that sleeping woman, in order to avoid one who will destroy your old age . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Begone, it is too late . . .

ARIELLE

No, it is not too late; this is the one moment; and your destiny depends on the movement which you make . . .

MERLIN

Begone, do not tempt me, or I will plunge you back into your impotent shade . . . I drew you from it to open my eyes and not to mislead me . . .

ARIELLE

To listen to the instinct by which alone men are saved is not to be misled . . . Think of the terrible days which Viviane is preparing: Viviane, whom you must love if you do not love this one . . .

MERLIN

Viviane? . . . Is it in this life or in some other world that that name resounds within my secret heart like a name of madness, sorrow and shame? . . .

Joyzelle

ABIELLE

No, it is in this life, the only one that you possess . . . It is the name of the fairy who, in Brocéliande, where your fate leads you, awaits your coming to shatter your old age . . . O master, I see her! . . . Have a care, she approaches and will win your heart! . . . So soon as this love, so pure, so healthful, shall have lost its claims, hers crawls out of the shadow . . . Master, I entreat you! . . . My eyes are counting her wiles: she entwines you with her arms which travesty love; she takes away your power, your reason, your wisdom, she snatches from you at last the secret of your strength; and, like an old, drunken man, you fall to the ground . . . Then she strips you, mocks at you, stands erect again and closes on us the door of the mortal cavern which will never open again . . .

MERLIN

It is inevitable, then? . . .

Joyzelle

ARIELLE

You know as I do, that nothing can deceive me where you are concerned . . . Master, I beseech you, both for yourself and for me, who love the light and who must lose it with you! . . . This is the irrevocable hour! . . . Choose, choose life! . . . It still offers itself and therefore it belongs to us, and you have a right to it! . . .

MERLIN

Begone, it is useless . . . Besides, this one would never have loved me . . .

ARIELLE

It is enough that you love her and that he whom she loves no longer stands between you . . . That is what I read in the two futures . . .

MERLIN

[Wiping the sweat of anguish from his brow.] Begone, for I know . . . And so it was written that, by loving this child, I could have saved myself . . . But she is not for me; and my hour is past . . . This is the hour of those who come and who have met as time ordained, as life ordained . . . Begone, begone, I say! . . .

Joyzelle

[ARIELLE, veiling her features, exit silently.]

I surrender my share; and it is for you, my son, that I complete the proof . . . [He takes off his cloak and appears taller and younger, dressed in clothes similar to LANCÉOR's and presenting a strange resemblance to him. Approaching JOYZELLE.] Ah, my innocent Joyzelle! . . . You will suffer too, you must suffer still more, since destiny lies hidden in your tears; but what matter the sorrows that lead to love? . . . I would gladly exchange all the joys that I have known in my poor life for the most cruel of those happy sorrows . . . [He leans over JOYZELLE.] Arielle spoke truly. I have but to make a movement to put back the hours and the days and thus escape the horrible end which fate reserves for me . . . Yes, but that movement destroys him whom I love more than myself, him whom the years have chosen for the love for which I had hoped . . . Ah, when we thus hold in our hands our own happiness and that of another man; when we must crush one so that the other may survive: it is then that we feel how deep are the roots that bind us to the earth on which we suffer; it is then that life utters a superhuman cry to make itself heard and to defend its rights! . . . But it is then also that we must give ear to the other voice that speaks, to the voice that has nothing definite or sure to tell us, that has nothing to promise and that is only a murmur more sacred than life's inarticulate cries . . . Lancéor and Joyzelle, love each other, love me, for I have loved you . . . I am weak and frail and made for happiness like other men; nor do I surrender my share without a struggle . . . Love each other, my children; I am listening to the little voice which has nothing to tell me, but which alone is right . . . [He kneels before JOYZELLE and kisses her on the forehead.] [Waking with a start.] Lancéor! . . .

JOYZELLE

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Yes, it is I: the darkness has led me to you; and I come to wake you with a new kiss, so that you may . . .

JOYZELLE

[Springing up and looking at him in terror.] Who are you? . . .

MERLIN

[Putting out his arms to embrace her.] You know who I am, Joyzelle, and love must tell you . . .

JOYZELLE

[Drawing back violently.] Ah, do not touch me, or I shall summon death to come to put an end to this horrible dream! . . . I know not what phantoms have haunted this night, but this is the vilest, the basest, the most cowardly that the darkness has sent! . . . I do not believe in it yet! . . . I am bruising my eyes in trying to awake myself! . . . Ah, do not come near me! . . .

Joyzelle

Back! . . . Begone! . . . You fill me with horror! . . .

MERLIN

Look at me, Joyzelle! . . . I do not understand you; and doubtless sleep still troubles . . .

JOYZELLE

Where is he? . . .

MERLIN

Wake, Joyzelle . . .

JOYZELLE

Where is he and what have you done with him? . . .

MERLIN

He is wherever I am; and, if your eyes mislead you . . .

JOYZELLE

Do you not know that I carry him here, in these eyes which see you and compare what he is with what you are? . . . Have you not seen what he is in my heart, that you should copy him thus? . . . You, beside him; you, in his clothes and under his aspect: ah, it is as though death pretended to be life! . . . But there might be twenty thousand of you resembling him and he alone be changed from what he was yesterday; and I would sweep away the twenty thousand phantoms, to go to the only man who is not a dream among the other dreams! . . . Oh, do not try to hide in the shadow . . . You retreat too late; I have discovered you and I know who you are . . . I know your spells; and how I should laugh at them, did I not fear that, by your witchcraft, when usurping that dear and unrecognisable shape, you have caused him to suffer! . . . What have you done to him? . . . Where is he? . . . I will know . . . You shall not go without answering . . . [Seizing MERLIN's hand.] I am alone, I am weak . . . But I insist, I insist . . . I will know, I will know! . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

I love you too much, Joyzelle, to do him any harm, so long as you love him . . . He has therefore nothing to fear . . . Do you not fear me either. I am not here to take advantage of the darkness and surprise your heart. I had another object . . . Listen to me, Joyzelle; it is no longer the rival or the unhappy lover that speaks to you; it is a prudent and anxious father . . . Before he came who conquered you, as never man in this world conquered woman, I had, I confess, caught a glimpse of a happiness which it is idle to pursue in the decline of years . . . To-day I retire, sadly, but in good faith . . . I know how much you love the poor unconscious being whom malevolent chance has placed upon your road . . . And do not mistake me; I am speaking of him now without hatred or envy, but not without dismay, when I think of the heart-rending days which he is preparing for you . . . That is why I insist on enlightening you as regards him, at the risk of displeasing you . . . I have no other care than to make you turn away from an unhappy love in which nothing but tears and disillusion await you . . . I have no hope for myself . . . I do not ask you to love me in his stead . . . You have shown me fully that that is impossible . . . I desire only that you will cease to love him: that is all that I implore of the kindness of fate; and fate to-night hears my prayer . . .

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

How? . . .

MERLIN

The proof is grave and sad; I would have liked to spare you . . . But you know better than I that there are salutary sufferings, before which it is shameful to fly . . . A sign will be enough to overturn a world . . . 'A little movement of that neck which as yet bends without anxiety, a single glance of those eyes, too confident and too full of innocence, will destroy before my sight the most beautiful thing that love has created in a woman's heart . . . And yet, it must be . . . It is right, it is well that this thing should to-day be lost in tears which it may yet be possible to wipe away; for later it would have had to sink in sorrows which nothing could have consoled . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

What do you mean? . . .

MERLIN

That, at this very moment, when all that is spotless and true, limpid and ardent in your heart, when all the transparent virtues of your soul, all the faithfulness, all the loyalty and all the innocence of your virgin blood mount up towards him whom you had selected to make of him the purest, the happiest of men, he is there, behind us, at two steps from this bank, sheltered by those leaves which he thinks impenetrable, in the arms of the woman with whom, the other day, as you yourself saw, he profaned the marvellous love which you have given him! . . .

JOYZELLE

No.

MERLIN

Why do you say no, without looking? . . .

JOYZELLE

Because he is myself . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

I do not ask you to believe my words: I simply ask you to turn your head . . .

JOYZELLE

No.

MERLIN

Do you hear the murmur of their voices mingling and the song of kisses answering kisses? . . .

JOYZELLE

No.

MERLIN

Do not raise your voice to interrupt a crime which you do not wish to see . . . They will not hear you; they listen only to the sound of their lips! . . . But turn, Joyzelle, I beseech you! . . . Your life is at stake and all the happiness to which you have a right! . . . Do not reject the proffered truth that comes to save you if you have the courage at last to accept it! It will not return except to make you weep, when it is too late! . . . But look! Look! . . . You need not even turn your head! . . . Your star is kind to you and does not tire! . . . Do not close your eyes, it is coming to unseal them! . . . See! . . . The shadow of their arms, lengthened by the moonlight, is creeping through that arch and covering your knees! . . . Open your eyes! Look! . . . It is coming to defy you, it is rising to your lips! . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

No.

[A pause.]

MERLIN

I understand you, Joyzelle . . . You must not deny what remains of your love while I am here . . . I leave you to yourself, face to face with your duty, face to face with your destiny . . . Such sacrifices ask for no witnesses: they demand silence . . . The truth is there; it is cowardly to fly from it . . . You will know how to face it when you are alone . . . There is yet time . . . I admire you, Joyzelle. . . . Your life and your happiness invoke your courage and depend upon a glance . . .

Joyzelle

[Exit MERLIN. JOYZELLE, for a long moment, remains seated on the bank, motionless, with wide-open eyes, staring fixedly before her. Then she rises, draws herself up and goes out slowly, without turning her head.]

CURTAIN

ACT IV

A Room in the Palace

(At the back, to the right, is a large marble bed, on which LANCÉOR is lying lifeless. JOYZELLE, anxious, dishevelled, is busy-ing herself around him.)

JOYZELLE

Lancéor! Lancéor! . . . He cannot hear me . . . His eyes are wide open . . . Lancéor, I am here, I am bending over your eyes . . . Look at me, look at me! . . . No, he does not see me! . . . Lancéor, for pity's sake! . . . If your voice is too weak, give a sign of life! . . . I take you in my arms, my arms that love you! . . . Come, come, come to yourself, in our great love! . . . See, see, it is my hands that are lifting your head . . . Do you recognise my hands, as they stroke your hair? . . . You so often told me, when we were happy, that the least caress of these dear hands would recall your soul, even from the greatest happiness of paradise, from the greatest darkness of . . . No, no, it is not there! . . . But his head is drooping, his arm falls back lifeless and his fingers seem to me colder than this marble . . . [Mechanically feeling one of the columns of the bed.] No, it is not that . . . But I must know . . . And his eyes are no longer . . . [Raising his head.] Is it his or mine that are so dim? . . . No, it is impossible! . . . No, no, I will not have it! Ah, I will open your lips! . . . [She places her lips on LANCÉOR's.] Lancéor! Lancéor! All the ardour of my life shall enter your heart! . . . Do not fear, do not fear! It is the saving flame and life that restores life! . . . Breathe it all in the last efforts of my breath which loves you! . . . I would gladly suffocate in exchanging my life for yours! . . . I give you my strength, my hours, my years! . . . Here they are, here they are! . . . You have but to make a movement, to open your lips! . . . It must be so! . . . It must be possible thus to give new life to those whom we love better than ourselves! . . . When we give them all, they cannot but take it! . . . [Raising her head to look at LANCÉOR.] He is falling back! He is going from me! . . . [Infatuated, she takes him in her arms again.] Help! . . . No, this is too much! . . . Help! Hasten! Hasten! . . . Ah no, I know better, no, no, it is not that . . . Death does not come like this when love threatens it! . . . No, no, I fear nothing, no, no, I will not have it! . . . But I am crying for help! I cannot remain alone, I cannot fight alone against all the strength of death approaching! . . . If no one comes, it will end by conquering! . . . Help, I say! . . . You must come to my aid! . . . Life must help me, or it is no longer possible and we shall succumb! . . . [She falls sobbing on LANCÉOR's lifeless body.]

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

[Enter MERLIN.]

MERLIN

I am here, Joyzelle . . .

JOYZELLE

[Starting up, as though to go to him,

Joyzelle

while still holding LANCÉOR in a close embrace.] Ah, it is you! . . . So it is you! . . . 'At last there is help and life coming! . . . Look at him! See! . . . It is time, he is falling back! . . . I fling myself at your feet! . . . Yes, yes, you can do all; and I have seen clear in all things! . . . Ah, at such moments as this, one would see clear in the depths of a darkness which worlds have never traversed! . . . Oh, I entreat you, tell me what to do! . . . I am no longer Joyzelle, I am no longer fierce and I have no more pride . . . I am broken and dead: I drag myself at your feet; and it is no more a question of this or that, of love or kisses, or of trifling things! . . . Life and death stand face to face, they are fighting under our eyes and must be separated . . . You do not move a step! . . . Ah, I know how great your hatred is and how you detest that defenceless man . . . Yes, you are right, he is anything you please, he is a coward, he is a rascal, he is your enemy, he is a twenty-fold traitor, since you will have it so! . . . Yes, I admit it, I was wrong, I confess it, and I no longer love him, since you wish it, and I am ready for anything, provided he be saved! . . . But that must be done and that counts and all the rest is madness! . . . But come, come, come, I tell you death is triumphing and will carry him off! . . . See, his hands are turning blue and his eyes are growing dull and it is horrible! . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Joyzelle, fear nothing; his life is in my hands and I will save him, if you wish me to save him . . .

JOYZELLE

If I wish you to save him! . . . But do you not see that, if you were to hesitate, do you not know that, if for his sake, I had to . . . No, no, I meant to say . . . my distress bewilders me . . . He has ceased to breathe, I no longer hear his heart . . . You seem to me so slow! . . . Do you think that there is no danger, no need for haste? . . . I will speak no more; I am making you lose minutes which perhaps were passing to save him . . . If you will not help him yourself—and I can understand that, for you do not love him—tell me only what I must do to assist him ; and I shall know how to do it . . . But I can see, I am sure that he cannot wait and that we must make haste . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

I have told you, Joyzelle, his life is in my hands and cannot escape without my consent. I warned you of it. The poison is doing its work and I can see it. I alone can cure him, snatch him from death, call back his vigour, his beauty, which are fading away, and restore him to you as he was before . . .

JOYZELLE

Ah, I entreat you, do not dally thus! . . . What is his beauty to me, if his life escapes us! . . . Give him back to me as he is, whatever he may be; what care I, if only I have him back, if only he breathes! . . .

MERLIN

Yes, I will give him back to you. I have already twice done—and each time repented—what I will do again for the last time, since you ask it: but it is a sacrifice which none but you could have obtained. By restoring his life, I risk my own. To rouse his strength, to recall his soul, I must give him a part of my strength, a part of my soul. It may be that he will take from me more than I have left and that I shall fall dead beside the rival whom I shall have restored to life . . . Time was when I would thus risk my existence to save a stranger by the wayside, almost without hesitating and without asking anything in exchange . . . But to-day I am more prudent and more wise. As I am offering my life, it is but fair that I should be paid for it and paid in advance; and I will give it to him only if you promise me the dearest moment of your own . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

How? . . . What am I to do? . . .

MERLIN

[Aside.] O poor and all too innocent child! . . . And you, my chaste thoughts, oh, take no part in the odious words which my voice must now spread around their love! . . . I blush at the proof and am ashamed of what I am now compelled to say . . . You will forgive me when you know all . . . It is not I that speak: it is the future, which man ought not to know, the shameless, pitiless future, which reveals a day and throws light upon a destiny only to conceal the rest and which wishes that I should know whether you are she whom it marks out . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

What are you saying? . . . Why do you hesitate? . . . There is nothing in the world; examine myself as I may, I see nothing in the world, in our world or in the other, that I could be asked and not be ready to . . .

MERLIN

See: I will cease talking in riddles . . . That man whom you see and whom you hold pressed in your arms lies stretched as near death as though he were laid on the slab of his tomb . . . A movement can bring him back to life; a movement can make him fall on the other side . . . Well, at the very moment when you say yes and before the echo which slumbers yonder under those marble vaults has time to repeat that you have consented, I will make the certain movement which will snatch him from the darkness, provided that you promise to come to-night, here, in this room in which I shall restore him to you and on this same bed over which you are leaning, to give yourself to me, without shame, without reserve . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

I? . . . Give myself to you? . . .

MERLIN

Yes.

JOYZELLE

I, give myself to you, when he is restored to me? . . .

MERLIN

So that he may be restored to you.

JOYZELLE

No, I have not understood . . . There are words, no doubt, which I do not understand . . . No, it is not possible that a man who is not one of the princes of hell should come thus, at the moment when all love's sorrow knows not what to hope for or what to undertake . . . No, I have mistaken you and am doing you an injury . . . You must forgive me; I am a virgin, I am ignorant, I do not quite know what those words imply . . . But I see now . . . Yes, you are right . . . Yes, yes, you mean to say that it is fair that I should bear a share of the danger and that my life should be joined for a moment to yours, in order to create the other life which is to revive him . . . But I want that share, I want it for myself alone, I want the whole of it, the greatest possible share, and I never hoped that it could be given me! . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Joyzelle, time presses . . . Do not seek elsewhere: you know what I am asking and the word means all that you dare not believe . . .

JOYZELLE

Then, at the very moment when he comes back to me, when I see him once more breathing in my arms and smiling at the love which he will have found again, I shall have to snatch from him all that I have given? . . .

Joyzelle

But what remains for him if you take everything from us; and what shall I tell him when he kisses me? . . .

MERLIN

You will tell him nothing, if you wish for his happiness . . .

JOYZELLE

But I must tell him everything, since I love him! . . . No, no, I can see clearly, that cannot be, that does not exist; and there must be gods or demons to prevent such things: if not, I cannot see why one should wish to live . . . I have confidence in them, I have confidence in you . . . It was only a proof; and all this is not, cannot be real . . . It seems to me that already you look at me with less ill-will . . . See, I beseech you, I throw myself at your feet and kiss your hands . . . I will confess all to you . . . I did not love you, you hated him too much; but I never believed that you were unjust or unworthy of love . . . When you came in, I did not hesitate, I went up to you, I asked you to snatch from death the only man I love; and yet I knew that you loved me too . . . But, I do not know why, my instinct told me that you were generous and capable of doing what I would have done for you, what he himself would have done; and, when you have done what we would have done, you shall have in our hearts a part of our love that is not the least good part, nor the least fine, nor the most perishable . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Yes, I know: when I have given him back his life, at the risk of my own, he will have the kisses, the lips and the eyes, the days and nights, all, in short, that forms love's vain and ephemeral happiness! . . . But I, I shall have something much better; and sometimes, by chance, in passing, I shall be vouchsafed a kindly smile, which will not perish, provided that I refrain from demanding it too often . . . No, Joyzelle, at my age we are no longer satisfied with illusions of that kind nor with those deceptive dregs. The hour of heroic falsehoods is past for me. I wish to have what he will have. I care little for your smile, which I know to be impossible: I want yourself; I want you absolutely, were it only for a moment; but I shall have that moment: he will give it me . . . [Approaching LANCÉOR.] Look at him, Joyzelle: his features are becoming distorted; we have waited too long and the danger increases with each minute that passes . . . Will you come? . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

[Casting a bewildered glance around her.] Nothing bursts, nothing falls and I am alone in the world! . . .

MERLIN

[Feeling LANCÉOR's body.] The danger is becoming grave. . . . I know the symptoms . . .

JOYZELLE

Well, then, yes, I will come! . . . I will come to-night! I will come this evening! . . . But save him first and restore him to life! . . . See, his eyes are hollowing and his lips are fading and I stand here bargaining for his life, as though it were a question of . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

He shall be restored to you ; but remember, Joyzelle, if you are not true to your promise, the hand that cures him will strike him mercilessly . . .

JOYZELLE

But I shall be true to it and I would go on my knees to the end of the other world to remain true to it! . . . Ah, I will come, I tell you! I give myself absolutely and I am wholly yours! . . . What more do you want? . . . I have nothing left! . . .

MERLIN

It is well ; I have your promise ; I will fulfill mine. . . . [Aside, taking LANCÉOR in his arms.] Forgive me, my son, in the name of your destiny, which demands this torture . . . [He leans over LANCEOR and presses a long kiss on his eyelids and lips. Aloud.] See, he returns from the regions without light . . . Life is restored to him, but he will awake only in your eager arms. I leave you to your work. Remember your word . . .

Joyzelle

[Exit MERLIN. JOYZELLE has taken LANCÉOR in her arms and looks at him in anguish. Soon her lover's eyes half open and his hands move feebly.]

JOYZELLE

Lancéor! . . . His eyes have opened and closed again and I saw the light bathe in their blue! And here are his hands, which seem to seek mine! . . . Here they are, Lancéor, here they are in your own, which are no longer frozen! . . . They dare not leave them, lest they should lose them; and yet I would support your shoulder and embrace your neck which droops upon my breast . . . Ah, all the good things are returning and returning together! . . . I hear his heart beat, I breathe his breath: they took all away from me, but they have given it all back! . . . Listen to me, Lancéor: I want to see you, I am looking for your face, do not hide your forehead in my hair, which loves you; my eyes love you still more and want their share too! . . . [LANCÉOR lifts his head a little.] Oh, he has heard me and listened to me! . . . He is here, he is here, there is no doubt of it now, he is here, before me, more living than life! . . . He is here before me; and the roses of dawn and the flowers of awakening have brought colour to his cheeks and are covering his smile, for he smiles already as though he saw me! . . . Ah, the gods are too good! . . . They have pity on men! . . . There are skies that open! There are gods of love! There are gods of life! . . . We must thank them and love one another, since they also love! . . . Come, come, come to my arms; your eyes still seek me, but your lips find me . . . They open at last to call to mine; and mine are here, carrying all love! . . .

Joyzelle

[A pause; she kisses him long and eagerly.]

LANCÉOR

[Recovering consciousness.] Joyzelle. . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes, yes, it is I, it is I; look at me, look! . . . Here are my hands, my forehead, my hair, my shoulder. . . . And here are my kisses, which yours recognise! . . .

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Yes, it is you, it is indeed you, it is you and the light . . . And then this room, too, which I saw before. . . . Wait a little . . . What happened to me? . . . I remember, I remember . . . I was lying yonder, yonder, I know not where, before great doors which some one was trying to open . . . I was buried and was turning cold . . . And then I called to you, I called without ceasing and you did not come . . .

JOYZELLE

But I did, I came, I was there, I was there! . . .

LANCÉOR

No, you were not there . . . I was seized with icy coldness, I was seized with darkness and I was losing my life . . . But now it is you! . . . Yes, yes, my eyes see you, they behold you suddenly as they emerge from the dark . . . Scared though they be by the glaring light, it is you they see and I am passing from the tomb to the joy of the sunlight in the arms of love! That seems impossible to one coming from so far! . . . I must touch you, I must cling to the caresses of your hands, to the light of your eyes, I must seize the real gold of the hair that bears witness to the daylight! . . . Oh, you could never believe how one loves when dying, nor how I mean to love you after losing you and finding you again! . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

I too; I too! . . .

LANCÉOR

And the joy of returning to the arms which press you and which still tremble, because they had ceased to hope! . . . Do you feel yours quiver and mine adore you? . . . They seek, they enlace one another, they fear lest they should lose one another, they no longer dare to open . . . They no longer obey, they do not know that they are hurting us and are like to stifle us in their blind intoxication! . . . Ah, they know at last the worth of clasping a glowing body; and one would die to learn life and to know love! . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Yes, one would die . . .

LANCÉOR

It is strange: when I was down there, in the frozen region, some one approached whom I thought I recognised . . .

JOYZELLE

It was he.

LANCÉOR

Who?

JOYZELLE

The lord of the island.

LANCÉOR

He? . . . But he hated me . . .

JOYZELLE

It was he.

LANCÉOR

I do not quite understand . . . Did he then bring me back to love, to life? . . . Was he willing to restore me to her who loved me and whom he loved himself? . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Yes.

LANCÉOR

But why did he do it? . . .

JOYZELLE

I besought him until he consented.

LANCÉOR

Did he hesitate?

JOYZELLE

Yes.

LANCÉOR

Why?

JOYZELLE

He said that, in saving your life, he risked his own.

LANCÉOR

Nothing compelled him to it . . . And then, quite simply, he gave back life to the only man who is taking away all hope of the love that would make the happiness of his life? . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Yes.

LANCÉOR

And without asking anything, from kindness, from pity, from generosity? . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes.

LANCÉOR

Ah, we were unjust and our worst enemies are better than we believe! . . . There are treasures of nobility and love even in the heart of hatred! . . . And this thing which he has done! . . . No, I really do not know that I could have done as much; and I would never have thought that that poor old man . . . But is it not almost incredible, Joyzelle, and is it not heroic? . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes.

LANCÉOR

Where is he? We must go and fling ourselves at his feet, confess our error, wipe out the injustice of which we were guilty when we did not love him . . . He must have his part and the best part of the happiness which he restores to us! . . . He must have our hearts, our joy, our smile and our tears of love, all that one can give to those who give all! . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

We will go, we will go . . .

LANCÉOR

Joyzelle, what is it? . . . You scarcely answer me . . . I do not know if my senses are still in the power of the night whence I am issuing, but I do not recognise your words and your movements . . . You seem to be seeking, doubting, dreaming . . . And I, who return to you full of love and joy, find so little of either in your eyes, which avoid me, in your hands, which forget me . . . What has happened? . . . Why recall me and restore me to life, if, during my absence, I have lost what I love? . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Oh no, no, Lancéor, you have not lost me! . . .

LANCÉOR

Your voice seeks a smile and finds but a sob . . .

JOYZELLE

Yes, I wanted to smile and I am smiling now . . . But do not be surprised: I have wept so long and so desperately that the tears still rise in spite of myself . . . Joy was so far away that it could not return with the first kisses . . . It will need many before it recovers confidence in my heart; and I am almost sad in the midst of my happiness . . .

LANCÉOR

Oh, my poor Joyzelle! . . . Is that what your grave silence means? . . . And I was distressing myself like a stupid child! . . . I am thinking only of myself, I am drunk with life and understand nothing . . . I was forgetting that in your place I should have lost courage . . . It is true, you are right, it is you, not I, returning from death; and, when two beings love as we do, the one that does not die is the only one that really dies . . . Do not hide your tears . . . The sadder you appear, the more I feel that you love me . . . Now it is for me to take care of you, now it is for me to call back your soul, to warm your disconcerted hands, to pursue your lips and bring you back to the midst of the happiness which we had lost . . . We shall soon be there, since love is our guide . . . It triumphs over everything when it finds two hearts that give themselves to it fearlessly and without reserve . . . All the rest is nothing, all the rest is forgotten, all the rest withdraws to make way for love . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

[Staring fixedly before her.] All the rest withdraws to make way for love . . .

CURTAIN

ACT V

SCENE I

A Gallery in the Palace

[Enter MERLIN and LANCÉOR.]

FATHER! . . . Then it is true and you are my father! . . . And indeed it seems to me, since you told me, as though I had always known it in my far-seeing heart . . . [Coming closer.] But how wonderful it is! . . . I see you again at last as I saw you amid my childish sports; and, when I look at you, I see myself in a graver, nobler and more powerful mirror than those which reflect my features along this room. But what will Joyzelle say? . . . How she will laugh when she remembers her fears, for she imagined . . . No, she herself shall tell you what she thought, to punish her for her senseless terror . . . She used to hate you, but with a softened hatred that already smiled like one about to be pierced by the rays of love . . . But where is she hiding? . . . I have been seeking her for nearly two hours in vain . . . Have you seen her? I must tell her at once of the unspeakable happiness which this evening has brought us . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Not yet. I must remain in her eyes, until the close of the day, the pitiless tyrant whom she curses in her heart. My poor, dear child! . . . How I have tortured your adorable love! . . . But I have already told you the object of these proofs . . . In making you suffer, I have but been the instrument of fate and the unworthy slave of another will, whose source I do not know, which seems to demand that the slightest happiness should be surrounded by tears . . . I have but hastened, in order to bring happiness more quickly, the coming of those tears which hung in suspense between your two destinies . . . You shall know some day by what power, a power which has no magical or supernatural quality, but which still lies hidden at the bottom of men's lives, I at times command certain phenomena, certain appearances that bewildered you. You shall also learn that I have acquired the gift, often a useless one, of reading the future a little more clearly and a little further than the rest of men . . . And so I saw you, groping for each other, in time and space, for an unparalleled love, the most perfect perhaps that the two or three centuries over which my eyes have turned concealed within their shade . . . You might have met each other after many wanderings; but it was necessary to hasten the expected meeting, because of you, my son, whom death claimed in the absence of love . . . And, on the other side, nothing marked out Joyzelle for the hoped-for love, save a few scattered and uncertain points and the proofs themselves which she was to surmount. I therefore hurried on the prescribed proofs: they have all been painful, but necessary; the last will be decisive and more serious . . .

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

LANCÉOR

Serious? . . . What do you mean? . . .
It will not be dangerous for Joyzelle, or for others? . . .

MERLIN

It will not be dangerous for Joyzelle, but it imperils, for the last time, the predestined love to which your life is linked . . . That is why, despite of all, despite of my confidence, despite of my anticipations, my certainty even, I am afraid, I tremble a little at the approach of the decisive hour . . .

LANCÉOR

If Joyzelle is to decide, love has nothing to fear . . . Come, do not hesitate, Joyzelle will always be the source of joy . . . But I do not understand how, knowing the future, you are not able to see her triumph beforehand? . . .

MERLIN

I already told you, before we came in here, that Joyzelle can change the future which she faces . . . She possesses a force which

Joyzelle

I have seen in none save her; that is why I do not know whether the great victory which your love expects will not be mingled with some little shadow and tears . . .

LANCÉOR

What do you mean? . . . You seem perturbed . . . What are you hiding from me? . . . How can you believe that Joyzelle would ever be the cause of a tear or the cause of a shadow? . . . There is nothing in Joyzelle, not even the suffering which she might inflict, there is nothing in her but brings health, happiness and love! . . . Ah, how well I see that you know little of the living triumph, the endless dawn contained in her voice, her eyes, her heart! . . . One must have held her in his arms to know what treasures of hope, what torrents of certainty issue from the least word murmured by her lips, from the slightest smile that plays upon her face . . . But I am too long delaying the impatient victory. Go, father, go . . . I will remain here, I will wait, I will watch the happy moments pass, until my Joyzelle utters a great cry of joy which shall tell me that love has determined destiny . . .

Joyzelle

[MERLIN embraces LANCÉOR and goes out slowly.]

SCENE II

(The same room as in Act IV. The moon lights it with its blue radiance. On the right, MERLIN is seated on the great marble bed. ARIELLE is kneeling at the head of the bed, on the steps of the dais that supports it.)

MERLIN

Arielle, the hour is striking and Joyzelle is approaching . . . I have made the sacrifice of my useless life; and yet I would that my death, if possible, should not come to sadden the most ardent and innocent love that the world has known . . . But you tremble, you weep, you hide from me your eyes swollen with tears . . . What do you see, my child, that you contemplate with so great a dread? . . .

Joyzelle

ARIELLE

Master, I beseech you, abandon this proof: there is yet time! . . . My eyes cannot see through the mist that surrounds it . . . It may be mortal, I see it, I feel it; and chance has placed our two lives in the hand of a blind and infatuated virgin . . . I do not want to die! . . . There are other outlets . . . I have always served you as your very thought . . . But to-day I am afraid, I can follow you no longer. . . . You well know that my death is the echo of yours . . . Abandon this: we will look elsewhere, in the future; and we can still escape the danger . . .

MERLIN

I cannot abandon the last proof . . . It is for you to see that it does not turn to disaster. It is for you to grasp the as yet uncertain weapon which Joyzelle is preparing to raise against us . . .

ARIELLE

But I do not know that I shall succeed! . . . Joyzelle's strength is so swift, so profound, that it escapes my arm, escapes my eyes, escapes destiny! . . . I see only the flash of falling steel . . . All is confused in a shadow; and my life and yours depend on a movement of my unskilful hand . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

She is there, I hear her, she is feeling for the door . . . Be obedient and silent; I am obedient too. Watch and be quick and strong . . . I will close my eyes and await my fate . . .

ARIELLE

[Dismayed and maddened.] Abandon the proof! . . . I cannot go through with it! . . . I refuse! . . . I want to fly! . . .

MERLIN

[Imperiously.] Silence! . . . [He stretches himself on the bed, closes his eyes and appears to be sleeping soundly. ARIELLE, overcome by her sobs, sinks down on the steps of the dais. On the left, at the opposite end of the room, a little door opens and JOYZELLE enters, wrapped in a long cloak and carrying a lamp in her hand. She takes two or three steps and stops. 'ARIELLE rises and stands invisible behind the heavy curtains at the foot of the bed.]

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

[Stopping, haggard, hesitating, trembling.] Now and here . . . I have taken the last step . . . Until this moment, which time can no longer keep back and which is about to see a thing that will never be wiped out; until I came to that little door which has just closed upon two captive destinies, I knew, I knew all that I had to do . . . Ah, I had reflected and I had judged so well! . . . There was nothing but that, there was nothing else: it was certain, it was just, it was inevitable! . . . But now all changes and I have forgotten all . . . There are other powers, there are other voices and I am all alone against all that speaks in the uncertain night . . . Justice, where are you? . . . Justice, what must I do? . . . I shall act because you wished it . . . You convinced me and urged me on . . . There, but now, under the thousands of stars which shone upon the door and which you invoked to reassure my soul! . . . There was no doubt, then, and all the certainty of all that breathes and of all that quivers and of all that loves and has a right to love illumined my heart! . . . But, in face of the deed, you yourself draw back, you deny your laws and abandon me! . . . Ah, I feel too much alone, delivered like a blind slave to the unknown . . . I shall walk without looking . . . I see nothing and I shall not raise my mad eyes to the bed until the moment when the thing . . . [She advances with a mechanical step to the foot of the bed.] Now, fate itself shall say yes . . . [She lifts the lamp, looks at the bed, sees MERLIN sleeping and, in her surprise, takes a step back.] He sleeps! . . . what is this? . . . I had not foreseen . . . Anything but this . . . Must I wait still? . . . Oh, I should like to wait! . . . He is sound asleep . . . Then he did not wish . . . But, if he were not asleep, I could not have done it . . . He would have disarmed me, he would have mastered me . . . It must be true, it is fate, it is a good and just fate that delivers him to me thus . . . I, who was looking for a sign!

Joyzelle

Joyzelle

. . . But there is the sign! . . . What more do I want, if I want anything more? . . . And yet, as he is asleep, I cannot know . . . Perhaps he has pity, perhaps he renounces and would bid me go! . . . He was not without soul; and often, at moments, he spoke like a father . . . Ah, if he had risen, if he had been there, with arms held out to me, in an attitude of . . . Then, then I should have been strong and should have conquered! . . . But a man asleep . . . That shatters hatred . . . And then, one no longer knows . . . And to change this sleep which one word puts to flight into that which no human or super-human power can disturb! . . . Oh, I would at least that one word of forgiveness . . . Ah no, I am too great a coward! . . . This is terror seeking an outlet . . . I did not come for further meditation . . . There is no doubt, after what he did, after what he said! . . . I listen only to my voice, the voice of my destiny, which wills that I should save us both! . . . So much the worse if I am wrong! . . . I am right! I am right! . . . Go out, my lamp: I have seen all that

Joyzelle

I need see . . . [She puts out the lamp, places it on one of the marble stairs, seizes the dagger which she held concealed, raises it and looks at it for a moment.] Now, it is your turn! . . . Ah, if you could do what my thought, my desperate pity wish, and if the death that gleams at the point of this blade were not real death, irrevocable death! . . . But enough . . . It is time . . . It is said, it is done, I strike! . . .

[She raises the dagger to strike MERLIN. ARIELLE, invisible, seizes her wrist and, without apparent effort, paralyses her gesture. At the same moment, MERLIN opens his eyes, smiling, rises and, with a movement of delight, takes JOYZELLE tenderly in his arms.]

MERLIN

It is well! . . . Joyzelle is great and Joyzelle triumphs! . . . She has conquered fate by listening to love; and it is you, my child, whom destiny marks out . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

[Still failing to understand and struggling.] No, no, no! . . . I could not . . . Ah, though my heart fail me, I have courage yet! . . . And I have all my life, if I no longer have my strength, and never, no, never, so long as I have breath . . .

MERLIN

Look at me, Joyzelle . . . I am restoring its strength to the arm which you raised in love's defence . . . I leave it its weapon which tried to strike me and which was striking true . . . Until that movement, all was undecided; now, all is clear, all is radiant and sure . . . Look at me, Joyzelle, and no longer fear my lips . . . They seek your brow, there at last to place the kiss which the father lays on the brow of his daughter . . .

JOYZELLE

What is this and what do you mean that I cannot understand? . . . Yes, I see in your eyes that you seem to love me as one loves a child . . . So I was mistaken and I was on the point of . . .?

Joyzelle

MERLIN

No, you were right; you would not have been she whom love demands if you had not done what you were going to do.

JOYZELLE

I do not know. I am dreaming . . . But since it is not the abominable thing, I abandon myself to my dream . . .

MERLIN

Yes, it is true, my Joyzelle, I am yearning to enjoy your delighted surprise, to follow your glances which seem to me so beautiful in their astonished flight, in which confidence dawns and which no longer know where to rest their wings, like sea-birds that have lost the shore . . . I am taking my share of the happiness which I am bestowing . . . I shall have no other . . . But do not be anxious, we shall together enter into the secrets of fate; and, when Lancéor . . .

JOYZELLE

Where is he?

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Ah, that name rouses you; and see, the shore appears to those glances lost in space! . . . Listen, I hear him . . . Your heart, without our knowing it, has gone to tell him that you loved him to the point which love cannot surpass . . . He is hastening, he is here! . . .

[The door opens. Enter LANCÉOR, followed by ARIELLE, invisible.]

LANCÉOR

Father! . . . She is mine! . . .

MERLIN

My son, she has triumphed; destiny gives her to you . . .

LANCÉOR

[Taking JOYZELLE in his arms and covering her with wild kisses.] Ah, I knew it and I was sure of it! . . . Joyzelle, my Joyzelle! . . . I do not ask what you can have done to disarm fate . . . I know nothing yet; but we know all beforehand who love each other as you and I love; and already

Joyzelle

I hail the new truth that must have been revealed at the first touch of your heart! . . . Ah, father, father, I told you, I told you! . . . But she does not understand why I am embracing you . . . It is true, I go too fast . . . Come here, Joyzelle, that I may unite you both in my arms . . . We had with us an enemy who loves us; he was obliged to make us suffer; and that gentle enemy was my own father, whom I thought lost, my father here, my father found again, who awaits but a smile to embrace you too . . . Oh, do not turn away, do not look at me with those eyes already laden with reproaches . . . I have hidden nothing from you . . . I knew it to-day, this evening, the moment you left me; and, so soon as I knew it, I had to fly far from you, lest I should betray myself, for all our happiness, it appears, depended on this last secret; and, when a secret is committed to love, it is as though one hid a lighted lamp in a crystal vase . . . You would have learnt all merely by seeing my eyes, my hands, my very shadow; and I could not show you my happiness . . . You were not to know of it till the great proof . . . It was necessary that you should do an impossible thing . . . What thing I do not know; but, smile as I might, I had to yield; I had to wait and patiently count the minutes of the hour which thus separated our two impatient passions . . . But now, I hasten, I listen, I want to know . . . Speak, speak, I am listening . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Since you are happy, I am happy, too . . . I know nothing more . . . I have scarce awakened from a horrible and incomprehensible dream . . .

MERLIN

Yes, my poor Joyzelle, the dream was horrible; but now it is overcome and the proof is past, establishing a happiness which nothing threatens now, except the enemy that threatens all men . . .

LANCÉOR

But what, when all is told, was that fearful proof? . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

Joyzelle will tell you in the first kisses, free from all anxiety, which you will exchange after this victory. They will veil better than my poor words what, in this proof, appears unpardonable . . . The proof was dangerous and almost insurmountable . . . Joyzelle could have chosen a different course . . . She might have yielded, sacrificed herself, sacrificed her love, despaired, I know not what! . . . She would not have been the Joyzelle that was expected . . . There was but one path traced by destiny; she entered upon it, followed it to the end and saved your life in saving her own love . . .

JOYZELLE

It is ordained, then, that love strikes and kills all that tries to bar its way? . . .

MERLIN

No, Joyzelle, I do not know . . . Let us not make laws with a few scraps picked up in the darkness that surrounds our thoughts . . . But she who was to do what you were willing to do was she whom fate intended for my son . . . It was therefore written, for you and for you alone and perhaps for those who resemble you a little, that they have a right to the love which fate points out to them; and that that love must break down injustice . . . I do not judge you: it is fate that approves you; but I am overjoyed that it has thus chosen you among all women . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Father! . . . I tremble still when I see that weapon which, for a moment . . . Forgive me, father, I loved you already . . .

MERLIN

It is I who ask you now to offer me a forgiving hand . . .

JOYZELLE

No, no, these are not the cold hands of forgiveness! . . . These are the hands that caress, worship and give thanks! . . . I know now why, despite my hatred, I could not hate! . . . What you have done was more difficult than all that I have done, because it was cruel; and, when I think again on what has happened, it is you, it is you, father, who have endured the heaviest and the most deserving proof . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

No, the most deserving was not among those which you can discover . . . It will remain the secret of this heart which loves you both and unites you within itself and which, to change this too-deep secret into happiness, asks my two children for but a moment of their joy and perhaps for a kiss a little longer than those granted in passing to old men whose time on earth is short . . .

LANCÉOR

[Throwing himself in MERLIN's arms.] Father! . . .

JOYZELLE

[Also embracing MERLIN.] My father too! . . .

ARIELLE

[Trying to mingle with the closely entwined group.] No one sees me and no one thinks of giving me my share of the love snatched by my invisible hands from the miserly hands of the days and years . . .

Joyzelle

MERLIN

[Smiling.] I see you, Arielle: you love all three of us; but a more ardent kiss ascends towards Joyzelle than those which you give to us . . . There, kiss her; the proof is finished in my old heart too . . . Yet a little while and we shall be far from her and far from all love . . .

[ARIELLE kisses JOYZELLE long and slowly.]

JOYZELLE

What are you saying, father, and to whom are you speaking? . . . It seems as though flowers which I cannot gather were lightly touching my forehead and caressing my lips . . .

MERLIN

Do not repel them, they are sad and pure . . . It is my poor Arielle who spreads them over you; it is my invisible daughter, the good fairy of the island, who discovered and protected you and Lancéor. She wishes to mingle, for the last time, in your great love and asks for a share, as discreet as herself, of the happiness which we owe her . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

Where is she? . . . I see no one near me but you and Lancéor . . .

MERLIN

And do you think, my child, that we see all that lives deep down in our lives? . . . Be kind and gentle to poor Arielle . . . She is now giving you a parting kiss before going far away to disappear with me in the regions where fate wills that my destiny should be fulfilled . . .

LANCÉOR

To disappear with you? . . . Father, I do not know . . .

MERLIN

Let us not question those who have nothing more to say . . . All is now determined . . . Thanks to the unknown gods, I have been able to give happiness to the two hearts that were dearest to me ; but I can do no more, nor can you do anything, for my own happiness . . . I am going towards my destiny and I go in silence, lest I should sadden this smiling hour, which is yours alone . . . I know what awaits me ; and nevertheless I am going . . .

Joyzelle

JOYZELLE

No, no, no, no, father, you shall not go! . . . We are around you and, if some danger which we cannot see threatens your old age, we shall try at least to alleviate the dread of it . . . When there are three to undergo a misfortune and those three love one another, then the misfortune changes to a burden of love, which we bear with delight . . .

MERLIN

Alas, no, my Joyzelle: it would all be useless! . . . Would to the gods that men had to pass only through kindly evils, as yours were! . . . But all life's secret purposes are not so clear, are not so good . . . But we speak in vain of what is written . . . I am still here, in the arms of those who love me . . . The day of my distress is not this day . . . Let us enjoy our hour, in the sweet sadness that follows on great joys, by listening to our minutes of love, passing and fleeting, one by one, in that frail ray of nocturnal light in which we clasp one another for our greater happiness . . . The rest does not as yet belong to men . . .

Joyzelle

CURTAIN

APPENDIX I

(ACT III., SCENE II., p. 75). If this transfiguration of MERLIN's cannot be realised in a satisfactory manner on the stage, it may be easily avoided by cutting, on pp. 77 to 81, all that follows on JOYZELLE's exclamation. The scene will then be as follows:

JOYZELLE

[Waking with a start.] Lancéor! . . .
[Recognising MERLIN, with a movement of horror.] You! . . .

MERLIN

Yes, it is I: the proof is grave and sad, etc.

(The rest as on pp. 81 and 85.)

APPENDIX II

(ACT V., SCENE II., p. 129). Should there be a fear of "tedious passages" (as Villiers de L'isle-Adam said, "To be or not to be," and generally speaking, all Hamlet's speeches would be described to-day as "tedious passages"), the dénouement could be hastened on, beginning with ARIELLE's speech (p. 129), as follows:

ARIELLE

[Who has remained standing at the foot of the bed; in a sad and solemn voice.] Master!

MERLIN

I see you, Arielle, and I will obey . . .

JOYZELLE

What are you saying, father, and to whom are you speaking?

Appendix

MERLIN

To her who opened up to you the road to happiness. She is now giving you a parting kiss, which I also give you . . .

JOYZELLE

A parting kiss?

LANCÉOR

Father!

JOYZELLE

What does this mean and what has happened?

MERLIN

Let us not question those who have nothing more to say. Would to the gods that, etc

(The rest as in MERLIN's final speech.)

THE END

MONNA VANNA

TRANSLATOR'S NOTE

THIS version of "Monna Vanna" advances no claim to absolute literalness. It has been prepared for stage presentation; and certain expressions, perfectly inoffensive in the original, have been modified, brought into line with English ways of speech. There are words in our language that, to use Mr. Meredith's phrase, "for the sake of dignity, blush to be named," and such blushes may fitly be spared when a paraphrase is ready to hand. It remains only to be said that M. Maeterlinck's work, pure and lofty throughout, has been altered only at most immaterial points; and that no alteration whatever has been made without the full approval of the author.

ACT I

A Room in the Palace of GUIDO COLONNA

(GUIDO and his lieutenants, BORSO and TOR-ELLO, are standing by an open window, from which there is a view of the country around Pisa.)

GUIDO

OUR present extremity is so great that the Seigniorie have been compelled to reveal to me disasters they had long kept back. The two armies that Venice despatched to our relief are both hemmed in by the Florentines; the one at Bibbiena, the other at Elci. Chiusi, Montalone, the passes of the Vernia, Arezzo, and the defiles of the Casentine—these are all held by the enemy. We are isolated and helpless, given over to the hatred of Florence; and Florence is unforgiving when she no longer trembles. Our soldiers, the people, are still unaware of these disasters, but strange rumours are afoot, and daily becoming more definite. What will the Pisans do, when they learn the truth? Their rage will turn upon us, upon the Seigniory; we shall be the first to fall victim to their terror and blind despair. They have endured so much, during this long siege, that has lasted more than three months; they have borne their suffering so heroically, that it need not surprise us if famine and misery goad them now to madness. One hope was left to them; that is gone, and, with it, the last vestige of our authority. We shall be powerless. The enemy will batter down our walls, and Pisa cease to be . . .

Monna Vanna

BORSO

My men have shot their last arrow; their ammunition is spent. One may search the vaults from end to end without finding an ounce of powder . . .

TORELLO

We fired our last cannon ball two days ago at the batteries of Sant' Antonio; and even the Stradiotes, who now have nothing left but their swords, refuse to man the ramparts . . .

Monna Vanna

BORSO

From this window the breach can be seen that Prinzivalle's cannon have made in our walls . . . It is fifty paces wide; a flock of sheep could pass through . . . The place is untenable; and the Romagnians, the Sclavonians, and the Albanians have signified their intention to desert in a body should the capitulation not be signed to-night . . .

GUIDO

Thrice within the last ten days have the Signiory sent ancients of the College to treat for capitulation. These have none of them returned . . .

TORELLO

Prinzivalle does not forgive us the murder of his lieutenant, Antonio Reno, whom the frenzied peasants hacked to death in our streets. Florence avails herself of this murder to proclaim us outside the law, and treat us as barbarians . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

I have sent my own father to Prinzivalle to express our profound regret, and explain how powerless we were to control a mob whom hunger had driven frantic. My father was a sacred hostage. He has not yet returned . . .

BORSO

For more than a week now the city has lain open, and exposed on every side; our walls are a mass of ruin, our cannon silent. Why does Prinzivalle not give the order for assault? Can it be that his courage has failed him, or does he dread some ambush? Florence, perhaps, may have sent mysterious orders . . .

GUIDO

The orders of Florence are ever mysterious, but her designs are clear. Pisa, by her unswerving loyalty to Venice, has set a dangerous example to the little Tuscan cities; the Republic of Pisa, therefore, must cease to be . . . Florence has displayed rare artifice and cunning. She has contrived, little by little, to embitter this war, to poison it with strange acts of treachery and cruelty, that shall be held to warrant her pitiless revenge. It is not without cause that I suspect her emissaries of having incited our peasants to massacre Reno. So, too, was it part of her scheme to entrust this siege to Prinzivalle, the most barbarous mercenary in her employ—the man who won for himself such sinister fame at the sack of Placenza, where he put every man who bore arms to the sword—though he declared later this was done against his orders!—and sold five thousand free women into slavery . . .

Monna Vanna

BORSO

Such is the report, I know, but it is not correct. It was not Prinzivalle, but the Florentine Commissioners, who were responsible both for the massacre and the sale. I have never seen Prinzivalle, but one of my brothers knew him well. He is of barbarian origin. His father would seem to have been a Basque or a Breton, who kept a goldsmith's shop in Venice. He is undoubtedly of humble birth, but still not the savage that people hold him. From what I hear he is a dangerous creature, of dissolute habits, fantastic and violent, but, for all that, loyal; and I would unhesitatingly hand him my sword . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Wait till your arm can no longer wield it! And very soon now he will be stirring, and show us what he is! In the meanwhile we have one chance left: such of us, at least, as dare to meet death bravely, and to look it in the face . . . We must tell the whole truth to the soldiers, the citizens, and the peasants who have found shelter in our walls. They shall learn that no offer of capitulation has been made to us; and that we have not here one of those mimic wars in which two great armies fight from dawn to sunset, leaving three wounded on the field; not a fraternal siege that ends by the victor becoming the guest and the cherished friend of the vanquished. This is a bitter struggle for life or death; a struggle in which no mercy is shown; in which our wives and our children . . .

[Enter MARCO. GUIDO sees him and rushes eagerly to embrace him.]

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Father! . . . By what happy miracle, what stroke of good fortune in this calamity of ours, have you been restored to us, when I had almost given up hope . . . You are not wounded? You drag your foot behind you! Have they tortured you? How did you escape? What have they done to you?

MARCO

Nothing. They are not barbarians, thank God! They received me as an honoured guest. Prinzivalle had read my works; he spoke to me of the three dialogues of Plato, that I had found and translated. I am lame, it is true, but then I had far to go, and I am very old . . . Do you know whom I met in Prinzivalle's tent?

GUIDO

The merciless Commissioners from Florence!

MARCO

Yes, they were there—or, at least, one of them, for I saw only one . . . But the first name I heard was that of Marsilio Ficino, the man who revealed Plato to the world . . . Plato would seem to live again in Marsilio Ficino . . . I would have given ten years of my life to see him, before going whither all must go . . . We were like two brothers who had come together at last . . . We spoke of Hesiod, of Homer, Aristotle . . . Close to the camp, beside the banks of the Arno, he had unearthed, in a grove of olive, the torso of a goddess that had lain buried in the sand: it was so strangely beautiful that if you saw it you would forget the war. We dug on a little further; he found an arm, and I two hands . . . These hands were so pure, so delicate, they held such a radiant happiness, that one fancied them formed for naught else than to scatter the dew, or caress the dawn . . . One was curved tenderly, as though it had lain against a woman's breast; the other still clasped the handle of a mirror . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Father, father! Let us not forget that, here, people are perishing of hunger, and have little to do with delicate hands, or bronze torsos!

Monna Vanna

MARCO

This one is of marble . . .

GUIDO

Be it so! But let us speak rather of the thirty thousand lives to whom a moment's delay, a single imprudent act, spells ruin; whereas a word could save them: a whisper of good news . . . It was not for a torso or a mutilated hand that you went yonder! What did they say to you? What designs has Florence, or Prinzivalle? Tell us quickly! Why do they dally with us? Do you hear those cries underneath our window? The poor wretches are fighting for the grass that has grown between the stones . . .

MARCO

You are right. I was forgetting that men were at war with each other now that spring is here, and the glad sky smiling upon the earth, and the sea stretching towards the blue like a radiant cup that a goddess presents to the gods of heaven; and the earth so fair and so full of love for men! . . . But you have your joys; I dwell too long on mine . . . Besides, you are right. I should have told you at once the news that I bring . . . I bear a message fraught with salvation to thirty thousand lives, and with heavy affliction to one . . . But this one may find therein most noble occasion for glory, of a kind that seems greater to me than all the glories of war . . . Love for one person is good, and brings its own happiness; but the love that enfolds the many is greater and finer still . . . The virtues that all men admire are good; yet there come days when our eye travels beyond them, and then their value seems less . . . Listen! . . . And prepare yourself for what I have to say, lest my first words should wring from you one of those oaths that bar our retreat, and enchain the reason that fain would retrace her steps . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

[Dismissing his officers with a gesture.]
Leave us!

MARCO

No! Remain . . . It is our fate, the fate of us all, that we are about to decide! Indeed, I could wish that this room overflowed with the victims whom we shall save! That all the poor wretches to whom we bring comfort might be at the window there, to hear and retain for ever the tidings I bring; for I bring salvation, if reason will but accept it! Nor could ten thousand reasons turn the scale against one overpowering error, whereof I fear the weight the more, inasmuch as I myself . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Have done with enigmas, father, I entreat you! What can this matter be that calls for so many words? Tell us all! There is nothing can frighten us now!

MARCO

Be it so, then! Listen! I saw Prinzi-valle; I have had speech with him . . . It is strange how false is the picture men draw of one whom they hold in dread . . . I went to him as Priam to the tent of Achilles. I thought to meet a drunken, bloodstained savage—a madman whose only quality was a certain talent for war . . . For as such had he always been represented to me . . . I expected to find the incarnate fiend of battle, headstrong and incoherent, vain, debauched, treacherous, cruel . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

And all this is Prinzivalle, save that he be no traitor!

BORSO

Nay, traitor he is not; and, though he serve Florence, his loyalty is unstained . . .

MARCO

The man I met bowed down before me as though he were my disciple, and I the master whom he revered. He is learned, studious, wise, eager in search of knowledge. He listens patiently, and his eyes are open to all things that are beautiful. He is humane and generous, and has no liking for war; he is conscientious and sincere, the reluctant servant of a perfidious Republic. The hazards of life—destiny, it may be—made him a soldier, and hold him captive still to a glory that he detests, and fain would abandon, but not before he has gratified a desire; a fearful desire, such as would seem to fall on some men who are born beneath the perilous star of a great, unique, and unrealisable love . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Father, father, you forget that men who are dying of hunger can ill brook this delay! What are this man's qualities to us? You spoke of salvation; give us the word you promised!

MARCO

It is true. I do wrong to hesitate; for cruel as this thing may be to the two creatures I love best of all on this earth . . .

GUIDO

My share I accept, though it be what it may; but who is the other?

MARCO

Listen, I will . . . As I entered this room it seemed strange and difficult to me; and yet the chance of salvation was so overwhelming . . .

GUIDO

Speak!

Monna Vanna

MARCO

Florence is determined on our annihilation. The decemvirs of war have judged it necessary, the Seigniory have approved their decree; the decision is irrevocable. But Florence is too prudent, too wise in her hypocrisy, to allow the world that she is civilising to lay the charge of indiscriminate bloodshed at her door. She will declare, therefore, that we refused the merciful capitulation she had offered. The city will be taken by assault; Spanish and German mercenaries will be hurled against her. And these need no urging, when there is chance of pillage or burning, of rapine or slaughter! A mere matter of slipping the muzzle: and the leaders, that day, will take care to seem helpless, to have lost all control . . . Such is the fate held in store for us; and the city of the red lily will be the first to deplore the disaster, and will ascribe it wholly to the unforeseen licence of the foreign mercenaries, whom she will disband with every expression of horror, so soon as our ruin shall enable her to dispense with their services . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Yes. That is the way of Florence . . .

MARCO

These are the private instructions that Prinzivalle has received from the Commissioners of the Republic. Day after day, through this last week, they have urged him to deliver the final assault. Hitherto he has delayed it under various pretexts. Further, he has intercepted letters wherein the Commissioners, who spy upon his every movement, accuse him of treachery to the Seignior. Pisa destroyed, and the war over, condemnation, torture, and death await him in Florence, as they have awaited more than one dangerous general. So that he knows his fate . . .

GUIDO

Very well then, what does he propose?

MARCO

He is certain—as far, at least, as one can be certain where these shiftily savages are concerned—of a fair proportion of the archers, whom he himself enrolled. But, in any event, he has a bodyguard of a hundred men, who are devoted to him; and on these he can absolutely rely. His proposal is that all who may choose to follow him shall be brought into Pisa, and help to defend her against the army he will abandon . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

It is not men we need; and these dangerous auxiliaries do not tempt us. Let him give us bullets, provisions, powder.

MARCO

He foresaw that his offer might appear suspicious to you, and perhaps be rejected. He will undertake, therefore, to pass into the city a convoy of three hundred waggons, laden with ammunition and food, that have just entered his camp.

GUIDO

How can he do this?

MARCO

I know not. The ways of war and politics are strange to me. But he does what he will . . . The Florentine Commissioners notwithstanding, he is absolute master in his camp so long as the Scigniorie have not removed him from his command. And this they dare not do on the eve of victory, in the midst of an army that has faith in him, and already clutches its prey. Florence must wait her hour!

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Good, I understand; he saves us that he may save himself. He seeks revenge. But this, I imagine, could be achieved in other fashions, and more skilfully too. What can his interest be in saving his enemies? Whither will he go, and what will become of him? What does he demand in return?

MARCO

The moment has come, my son, when words turn cruel and all-powerful, when two or three syllables suddenly borrow the force of destiny, and fasten upon their victims . . . I tremble when I think that the sound of my voice, the way in which I may say what has to be said, can cause so many deaths, or save so many lives . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Why do you hesitate? . . . The cruellest words can add nothing to such a misfortune as ours . . .

MARCO

I have told you that Prinzivalle seems wise; that he is reasonable, humane . . . But where is the man so wise as to have no moment of folly; so virtuous as never to have harboured some monstrous idea within him? . . . Are not our reason, our pity and justice, for ever at war with desire, with passion, with the madness that lies so near to our soul? . . . I, myself, have succumbed more than once, and I shall again, and so, perhaps, will you . . . For it happens thus with us all! A sorrow awaits you that should be no sorrow perhaps, could you consider it rightly . . . And I who see so clearly that this sorrow is out of all proportion to the wrong that will cause it, I, for my part, have made a promise still more foolish than is this foolish sorrow . . . And my foolish promise will be foolishly kept by the sage I fain would be; the sage who ventures to speak in the name of reason . . . Should you reject this offer, I have undertaken to return to the enemy's camp . . . And what will await me there? Death and torture will probably be the reward of my absurd loyalty . . . And none the less I shall go . . . Tell myself as I may that I am merely tricking out folly in purple that I may delude myself, I still shall do the foolish thing I deplore; for I, also, lack the strength that he must possess who would listen to reason alone . . . But I have not yet told you. 'Ah, see how I lose my thread, how I weave phrase after phrase, pile word upon word, to retard, be it ever so little, the moment that must decide! But I wrong you, perhaps, by my doubts . . . See them! This mighty convoy that my own eyes have beheld; these waggons laden with corn and wine and fruit; these flocks of sheep and herds of cattle, enough, and more than enough, to feed a people for weeks; these barrels of powder and bars of lead with which Florence may be overcome and prosperity brought back to Pisa; all these shall be introduced this very night into our city if you will send in exchange and deliver to Prinzivalle—and she shall return with the first rays of dawn—but he demands, in token of victory and submission, that she come alone, and clad only in her mantle. . . .

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Who? Who is to go? You have not told me . . .

MARCO

Giovanna.

GUIDO

What! My wife? . . . Vanna? . . .

MARCO

Yes, your Vanna . . . At last I have said it!

GUIDO

But, why Vanna? Are there not a thousand women?

MARCO

It is because she is the most beautiful, and he loves her . . .

GUIDO

He loves her! . . . Where has he seen her? He does not know her!

Monna Vanna

MARCO

He has seen her. He knows her, but would not say when or how . . .

GUIDO

But she, has she seen him? Where have they met?

MARCO

She has never seen him, or, at least, she does not remember . . .

GUIDO

How do you know this?

MARCO

She told me herself . . .

GUIDO

What!

MARCO

Before I came here to you . . .

GUIDO

And you told her?

MARCO

All . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

What! you cannot have dared to hint at this infamous bargain?

MARCO

Yes . . .

GUIDO

And she said? . . .

MARCO

Nothing . . . Her face grew white: she left me . . .

GUIDO

Ah, she did well! . . . That was better perhaps than loading you with reproaches, and throwing herself at your feet . . . Yes, that was better . . . She turned white and left you . . . So would an angel have done; that is like Vanna . . . What was there to say? Nothing! And we, too, shall say nothing . . . Come, my friends, we will return to the ramparts, and die, at least, since die we must, without staining ourselves with dishonour . . .

MARCO

Ah, Guido, the ordeal is terrible, I know!

Monna Vanna

Now that the blow has fallen let us be patient, and give reason time to discriminate between duty and private sorrow! . . .

GUIDO

Duty! My duty is clear. Your monstrous offer entails one duty on me, and one duty alone. I need no time to reflect.

MARCO

And yet must you ask yourself whether you have a right to sacrifice a whole people; whether thousands of lives be not too high a price to pay . . . Did your happiness alone depend on this choice I could understand your preferring death; though to me who am near the end of life—to me who have seen many men and therefore much human sorrow, to me there can be no moral or physical evil that is not preferable to death, cold and horrible death, with its eternal silence . . . And here many thousands of lives are at stake; here your brothers in arms are concerned, their wives and children! . . . If you yield to a madman's frenzy, then the thing that seems monstrous to you shall be called heroic by those who come after. For they will judge with calmer eyes, with more justice, and more humanity . . . Believe me, nothing can equal the saving of life. Virtues, ideals, all that we know as honour and loyalty, are mere trifles compared with that . . . You would seek to pass through this ordeal like a hero, unstained; but it is wrong to believe that death is the loftiest peak of heroism . . . The most heroic deed is the one that costs us most, and death is often far easier than life . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

'Are you my father?

MARCO

Yes, and proud to be your father . . . In opposing you to-day I oppose myself also, and I should love you less did you submit too readily . . .

GUIDO

Yes, you are my father, you have given your proof; for you, too, shall choose death for your share; and since I reject this loathsome compact, you shall return to the enemy's camp, and there meet the fate that Florence reserves for you . . .

Monna Vanna

MARCO

My son, here I alone am concerned—a feeble and useless old man, with few years to live, a man of no value to any—and therefore did I tell myself that I might still humour an ancient folly, nor struggle to do what I know should be done if one indeed sought to be wise . . . I know not why I shall go yonder . . . My soul has remained too young in this old body of mine; and I belong to a time in which reason had little to say . . . But I regret that so many influences of the past should keep me from breaking a foolish promise . . .

GUIDO

I shall act like you . . .

MARCO

What do you mean?

GUIDO

I shall follow your example. I, too, shall remain faithful to those influences of the past that you now regard as absurd, though you fortunately still permit them to regulate your conduct . . .

Monna Vanna

MARCO

Where others are concerned I cast them from me; and since it appears that your soul demands my encouragement, demands the poor sacrifice of my word, then I renounce in my heart the fulfilment of my promise, and come what may, and decide as you will, I shall not return yonder . . .

GUIDO

Enough! There are things a son must not say to an erring father . . .

MARCO

Say what you would, my son: let your indignant words flow freely from your heart . . . I shall regard them as the token of your most legitimate grief . . . Words cannot alter my love for you . . . But, while cursing me, let reason and gentle pity take the place in your soul of the maledictions that leave it . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Enough: I will hear no more . . . Think; and try to consider what it is you would have me do. For at this moment it is you who are lacking in reason, in noble and lofty reason; you whose wisdom is troubled by the fear of death . . . Death does not frighten me . . . I can still remember the time when you enjoined courage upon me, before your own was weakened by age and the vain study of books . . . We are alone in this room. No one has beheld your pitiful weakness; and my two lieutenants and I will keep the secret that we shall, alas, not have to keep very long! We shall bury all this in our hearts; and now let us turn our thoughts to the final struggle . . .

MARCO

Nay, my son, buried it cannot be; for years, and the studies that you deem so vain, have taught me that it can never be right, whatever the reason, to bury the life of a single man; and though I indeed should no longer possess the courage that alone finds favour in your eyes, I still have another, less dazzling, perhaps, less highly esteemed by men, since it achieves less, and men admire most that which brings suffering to them . . . This will enable me to accomplish the rest of my duty . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

And what may that duty be?

MARCO

I shall complete what I have so unsuccessfully begun . . . You were one of the judges, but not the only judge; and all those whose life or death hangs on this hour have a right to know their fate, and to be told upon what their salvation depends . . .

GUIDO

I do not understand you. At least, I hope I do not. You were saying . . .

MARCO

That on leaving this room I shall at once inform the people of the offer that Prinzivalle has made and you have rejected . . .

GUIDO

It is well! Now I understand. I regret that idle words should have brought us to this, as I regret also that your delusions should compel me to be wanting in the respect that is due to your age . . . But it is a son's duty to protect a deluded father against himself; and while Pisa stands I am master here, and the custodian of her honour . . . Borso and Torello, I entrust my father to your care, until such time as his conscience shall reawaken within him. Nothing has happened! . . . No one shall know . . . Father, I forgive you; and you will forgive me, too, when, at the last hour, you remember how you once taught me to become master of myself, and unafraid . . .

Monna Vanna

MARCO

I have no need to wait for the last hour in order to forgive you, my son . . . I should have acted like you . . . And you may imprison me, but not my secret; for that is free, and can no longer be stifled . . .

GUIDO

What is this? What is this you say?

Monna Vanna

MARCO

That at this very moment Prinzivalle's proposal is being discussed by the Seignior . . .

GUIDO

The Seignior! Who can have told them?

MARCO

I told them before I came here . . .

GUIDO

You! No. No, it is impossible! However great your fear, or the havoc that age has wrought in your heart, you cannot have delivered the one joy of my soul, my love, the purity and beauty of our wedded life, into the hands of strangers, of miserable shopkeepers, who would weigh it and measure it as though it were salt or oil! . . . I cannot believe it. . . . I shall not, till my own eyes have seen it . . . And then I shall look upon you, you the father whom I loved and thought I knew, whom I took as my model, I shall look on you with no less horror and hatred than I do on the vile and cowardly monster who has besmirched us to-day with all this infamy!

Monna Vanna

MARCO

You speak truly, my son. You do not know me; and for that I am to blame. When old age came upon me I did not tell you what I learned from it every day concerning life, and love, and the joys and sorrows of men . . . Had I acquainted you sooner with all that was passing in my heart, with all the vanities that were slowly departing, and the truths that were taking their place, then should I not be standing before you to-day like some unhappy stranger whom you are beginning to hate . . .

GUIDO

'At least I rejoice that I did know you sooner . . . And as for the rest . . . it is not difficult to foretell what the Signiory will decide. To save themselves they have only to sacrifice one man, and that is so simple! Such a temptation would force a nobler courage than one has the right to expect from these poor traders. And yet, let them beware! That is asking too much. That is more than they have a right to ask. I have shed my blood for them; by day and by night have I toiled and endured; through this whole long siege I have never spared myself. But that is enough: and I will do no more! Vanna is mine! She belongs to me, and I am yet in command! My Stradiotes will at least remain faithful; I have three hundred men who will listen to me alone, and turn a deaf ear to the counsels of cowards!

Monna Vanna

MARCO

You are in error, my son. The Seigniory of Pisa, the citizens whom you speak of so slightly, before even knowing what their decision may be, have in this crisis given proof of an admirable nobility and courage. They have refused to owe their safety to the sacrifice of a woman's love; and as I left them and hastened to you, they were summoning Vanna, to tell her that they placed in her hands the fate of the city . . .

GUIDO

What! They have dared! In my absence, they have dared to repeat to her the foul words of that loathsome satyr! . . . My Vanna! . . . When I think of her tender face, that fires at a glance—of the shrinking modesty that makes her beauty lovelier still—my Vanna to have stood before these lecherous old men, these little pale-faced hypocritical traders, who have always looked upon her as something holy! “Go,” they will have said to her, “go yonder, naked and alone, to the barbarian’s tent! Do his bidding!” Ah, truly, it was noble indeed of them to have used no violence! They knew that I am still here. They ask her consent, you say! And mine—who will dare ask mine?

Monna Vanna

MARCO

Have I not done so, my son? And if you refuse me they will come in their turn . . .

GUIDO

Let them! Vanna will have spoken for us both . . .

MARCO

I trust that it may be so, and that you will accept her answer . . .

GUIDO

Her answer! Can you doubt it, you who know her, who have seen her every day since the one when, with smiles of love in her eyes, she first crossed the threshold of this very room, in which now you wish to sell her? You doubt her answer? . . .

Monna Vanna

MARCO

My son, each of us sees only in others what he sees in himself, and knows himself only to the extent of his own consciousness . . .

GUIDO

That is doubtless why I knew you so ill! But rather than that these eyes of mine should a second time be so cruelly deceived, I would pray God that they be closed for ever!

MARCO

They may be about to open, my son, beneath a very great light . . . I say this because I have noticed a certain strength in Vanna that you have not seen, and it is this that leaves me in no doubt as to what her reply will be . . .

GUIDO

You have no doubt! Ah, believe me, neither have I! And I accept her reply in advance, blindly, irrevocably! If it be not the same as mine, then have we both been deceived in each other, from the very first hour unto this one of sorrow . . . And our love will have been a mere lie, that now crumbles to dust; and all I adored in her will have existed only in this poor credulous head of mine, in this poor faithful heart that knew of one happiness only and worshipped a phantom . . .

Monna Vanna

[Cries of "Vanna, Vanna," arise from the crowd outside, at first as a murmur, and then growing louder and louder. The door, at back, opens, and VANNA, alone and pale, advances into the room, while men and women, who seem afraid to enter, try to hide themselves against the door. GUIDO sees her, and rushes towards her. He throws his arms round her and embraces her feverishly.]

GUIDO

My Vanna! . . . What have they done, what have they said to you! . . . No, no, do not tell me . . . I need only look into your eyes—there all is still pure and loyal, like a fountain that angels bathe in . . . Ah, those foolish men! They could harm nothing of what I loved; they have been like children who throw stones in the air, and imagine they can hit the sky . . . As they gazed into your eyes their words will have shrivelled on their lips . . . You had no need to answer—you will merely have looked at them . . . And then, between them and you, between their thoughts and yours, a lake will have sprung up, a limitless ocean of life and love . . . But see, there is one here, a man whom I call father . . . He sinks his head; his white hairs hide it . . . We must forgive him; he is old and blinded. We must be merciful; we must make a great effort; your eyes say nothing to him—he is so far from us! . . . He has become a stranger; our love has passed over his sad old age like an April shower that falls upon flints . . . Our love is nothing to him; it has all escaped him . . . He thinks that we love as they do who know not what the word means . . . He cannot understand, he needs words . . . Give him words; give him your answer!

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

VANNA

[Approaching MARCO.] My father, I shall go to-night.

MARCO

[Kissing her brow.] My daughter, I know . . .

GUIDO

What! What do you say?

VANNA

Guido, I shall go. I must; I must obey . . .

GUIDO

Obey? Obey whom? Tell me!

VANNA

I shall go to Prinzivalle's tent to-night . . .

GUIDO

To die with him, to kill him? That had not occurred to me. Yes, yes, I can understand that!

VANNA

Were I to kill him our city would not be saved . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

What! You, you love him then! Since when do you love him?

VANNA

I do not know him; I have never seen him . . .

GUIDO

But you have heard. Yes, yes, you have heard, people have told you . . .

VANNA

Nothing. Some one said just now that he was a very old man . . .

GUIDO

He is not! He is young, he is handsome, much younger than I. God! had he asked anything else I would have gone to him, crawled on my hands and knees, to save our city! Or wandered away with her and spent the rest of our life, unknown and forgotten, begging for alms at the cross-roads! . . . But this, this! Never in the history of the world has a conqueror dared— [Going to VANNA and flinging his arms round her.]

Monna Vanna

'Ah, Vanna, my Vanna, I cannot believe it! It is not your voice that I heard, but my father's and his alone! No, I have heard nothing; all is as it was . . . You shall tell me that I am mistaken, that your love, that all that was you, cried out, "No, no!" ashamed even at having to speak! . . . I tell you I have heard nothing, nothing; the silence has been unbroken . . . But, see, now you must speak . . . All are listening . . . No one has heard . . . All are waiting for the word you must say . . . Say it quickly, Vanna, that they may know you! Quickly! Declare our love, and dispel this dream . . . Speak the word I wait for, the word that must be spoken if all things are not to crumble in ruins around me! . . .

VANNA

'O Guido, I know how hard it must be to bear . . .

GUIDO

[Instinctively thrusting her from him.]
How hard it must be! You know, you know? Have I not to bear it all, I who loved? You never have loved me! No, I begin to see!

Monna Vanna

What am I to make of all this? . . . You are glad to leave me; you love this man, who knows! Ah, but here I still am the master, say what they will! . . . And you think I shall stand calmly by and let these things be? Beneath this room is a dungeon, a dark, cold dungeon, and there you shall stay while my Stradiotes keep watch, until such time as your heroism shall have cooled, and you learn where your duty lies . . . Take her away! . . . I have spoken; it is my command! Go, and obey!

VANNA

Guido, Guido, I need surely not tell you . . .

GUIDO

They do not obey! No one here to do my bidding! You, Borso, Torello, have your arms turned to stone? Can my voice not make itself heard! . . . You, down there, you others, who stand and listen, can you not hear me? I shout to them; they do not move . . . Take her away, I say! . . . Away, away! . . . Ah, I see what it is! They are afraid; they want to live—to live, that is all they care for! I must die that they may live; but not that way! . . . No, no, that were surely too easy . . . Here am I alone against the crowd, and I am to pay for it all . . . Why I, and not you! You all have wives! . . . [Half drawing his sword and approaching VANNA.] And what if I prefer death to dishonour? . . . That had not occurred to you! . . . But, see, I have only to raise my hand——

Monna Vanna

VANNA

If your love bids you, Guido . . .

GUIDO

“If your love bids you”! Ah, yes, speak of love, you who never have known what it means! You, in whose soul there can never have been any love! Now as I look at you I see a desert—a desert where all is swallowed up, parched and dying . . . not even a tear, not a tear! . . . What was I, what was I to you? A man whose arms offered shelter, that was all! . . . Had you but for an instant . . .

VANNA

Guido, look at me, look at me! Can you not see? What shall I say to you, Guido? Have I words to tell what I feel? Let me speak but one single word and all my strength goes! . . . I cannot . . . I love you, I owe everything to you! . . . And yet I shall go; I must, I must . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

[Thrusting her from him.] It is well! Go; get you hence! Go to him, I give you up. Go! You are mine no longer . . .

VANNA

[Seizing his hand.] Guido! . . .

GUIDO

[Pushing her away.] Ah, do not clutch at me with those warm, soft hands . . . My father was right; he knew you better . . . Father, here she is. This is your work, finish it now to the end . . . Lead her to this man's tent. I shall stay here and watch you go off together . . . But do not imagine that I claim a share in the bread and meat she will buy . . . There remains but one thing for me, and that you shall know very soon . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

[Clinging to him.] Guido, look at me; do not turn your eyes from me—that is too dreadful . . . Let me see your eyes, Guido . . .

GUIDO

See then! Look into my eyes, and read . . . Go, I know you no longer! Time presses—out yonder he waits: night is falling . . . Go! what have you to fear? I shall not kill myself. I am not mad; it is only when love is triumphant that reason totters, not when love crumbles . . . I have gazed into the very depths of love, ay, of love and fidelity . . . I have no more to say. No, no, unclasp your fingers; they cannot detain a vanishing love. All is over, finished, done with; there remains not a trace! . . . The past is engulfed, and the future too . . . Ah, yes, those pure white fingers, those noble eyes, those lips; there was a time when I believed . . . Now nothing remains . . . [Casting VANNA'S hands from him.] Nothing, nothing, less than nothing! Farewell, Vanna! Get you gone. Farewell . . . You go yonder? . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Yes . . .

GUIDO

You will not return? . . .

VANNA

Yes, I shall return . . .

GUIDO

As to that, we shall see . . . Ah, we shall see . . . Who could have told me that my father knew her better than I! . . .

[He totters, and clings to one of the marble columns. VANNA goes out slowly and alone, without another glance at him.]

ACT II

PRINZIVALLE'S Tent

(Sumptuous disorder. Hangings of silk and gold. Arms and precious furs are strewn about the place. Great chests lie half open, revealing quantities of jewels and glittering stuffs. The entrance to the tent is from the back, through a heavy curtain. PRINZIVALLE, standing by a table, is arranging documents, plans, and arms. Enter VEDIO.)

VEDIO

HERE is a letter from the Commissioner of the Republic.

PRINZIVALLE

From Trivulzio?

VEDIO

Yes. Messer Maladura, the second Commissioner, has not yet returned.

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVÁLLE

The Venetian army, that threatens Florence from the Casentine, is probably offering unexpected resistance. Give me the letter. [He takes it and reads.] He sends me the formal command, under penalty of immediate arrest, and for the very last time, to deliver the assault at dawn . . . It is well. The night, at least, is mine . . . Immediate arrest . . . Ah, how little they know! . . . Do they really imagine that stale, hackneyed words like these can bring terror to the man who awaits the unique hour of his life! . . . Threats, arrest, calumny, trial, judgment—what are all these to me? . . . They would have arrested me long ago, had they been able, had they dared . . .

VEDIO

Messer Trivulzio told me, as he gave me the letter, that he would follow. He desires to speak with you . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Ah, so he has made up his mind at last . . . Our interview will decide many things;

Monna Vanna

and this wizened little scribe, who stands here for all the occult power of Florence, and yet dares not raise his eyes to mine; this wretched, pale-faced dwarf who hates me more than death, shall spend an hour he has not looked for . . . Grave orders must have reached him that he ventures to beard the monster in his den . . . What guards are at my door?

VEDIO

Two old soldiers of your Galician band. I thought I recognised Hernando, and the other, I believe, is Diego.

PRINZIVALLE

Good; they would obey me, those twò, did I tell them to put all the saints of heaven in chains . . . It is growing dark; have the lamp lit. What is the time?

VEDIO

It is past nine.

PRINZIVALLE

Marco Colonna has not returned?

Monna Vanna

VEDIO

The sentries at the moat will bring him to you the moment he arrives.

PRINZIVALLE

He had been here ere this were my offer rejected . . . This hour decides ; and it holds all my life, like the great ships with flowing sails that prisoners dream of, as they stare into the darkness around them . . . It is strange that a man should thus confide all his destiny, his brain, his soul, his joy and his sorrow, to a thing so frail as the love of a woman ! . . . I could smile at it myself, were it not stronger than my smile . . . Marco does not return . . . She will come, therefore . . . Go, look for the beacon which declares her consent . . . See whether the light be there that heralds the trembling footsteps of the woman who gives herself that the others may live, and saves me at the same time as she saves her people . . . No, stay—I will go myself. I have waited for this hour since my boyhood, waited and yearned ; and no eyes but mine, not even those of a friend, must be the first to greet its coming

Monna Vanna

. . . [He goes to the entrance of the tent, flings back the curtain and looks into the night.] See, the light, Vedio, the light! See how it shines and flares into the blackness! . . . From the Campanile—that is well, that is as it should be . . . See how it pierces the gloom! . . . It is the only light that shines on the town . . . Ah, never yet has Pisa lifted to the skies so glorious a flower, waited for so long and with so little hope! . . . Ah, my brave Pisans! You shall hold festival to-night that will linger long in your annals; while I shall know a diviner joy than had I saved my native city . . .

VEDIO

[Touching his arm.] Let us return to the tent. Messer Trivulzio comes from yonder.

PRINZIVALLE

[Coming back and dropping the curtain.] That is so. We must still . . . The interview will be brief . . . [He goes to the table and fingers the papers there.] Have you his three letters?

Monna Vanna

VEDIO

There are only two.

PRINZIVALLE

The two that I intercepted, and this evening's order . . .

VEDIO

Here are the first two. You are crumpling the other in your hand . . .

PRINZIVALLE

He is coming . . .

[The guard raises the curtain. Enter TRIVULZIO.]

TRIVULZIO

Have you observed the strange light that appears to be flashing signals from the Campanile? . . .

PRINZIVALLE

You think they are signals?

TRIVULZIO

I have no doubt of it . . . I must speak with you, Prinzivalle.

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

Say on. Leave us, Vedio, but do not go far away; I shall want you. [VEDIO goes.]

TRIVULZIO

You are aware, Prinzivalle, of the high esteem in which I hold you. This, indeed, I have already proved to you more than once, but there is much besides of which you are ignorant; for the policy of Florence, which people term perfidious, though it be merely prudent, demands that many things should be concealed even from those whom she admits to her most intimate secrets. We all obey her profound orders; and each one of us must courageously support the weight of her mysteries, which are the emanation of her supreme intelligence. Let it suffice, then, that I tell you that I had a very good share in your election, notwithstanding your youth and unknown origin, to the command of the most magnificent army the Republic has ever put into the field; nor, indeed, has there ever been cause to regret this choice. But for some time now a party has been forming against you. I am not sure whether, in revealing this to you, I am not allowing the sincere friendship in which I hold you to infringe somewhat upon my duty. There are often occasions, however, when a too narrow clinging to duty may work more mischief than the very rashest generosity. Know, therefore, that you have enemies who accuse you most bitterly of indecision, vacillation, sloth. Others even go so far as to throw doubt upon your loyalty. Carefully framed slanders have been set on foot, which lend colour to these insinuations. They have produced a disastrous effect upon that section of the Assembly that already eyed you with disfavour. These have gone so far as to discuss your arrest, and your trial. Fortunately, I was advised in time. I hastened to Florence, and had no difficulty in opposing proof to proof. I stood surety for you. It remains for you now to justify my confidence, which has never for an instant wavered; for we are lost if you do not act. My colleague, Messer Maladura, is held in check at Bibbiena by the troops of the Venetian Proveditor. Another army is marching upon Florence from the North. The city is in danger.

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

All may yet be well if on the morrow you deliver the assault for which we have waited so long. This will set free our finest army, as well as the only captain whom victory has never forsaken; and we shall be able to return proudly to Florence, amidst the pomp and triumph that shall turn your enemies of yesterday into your most fervent admirers and partisans . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Is this all you have to say to me?

TRIVULZIO

Very nearly; though I have passed over in silence the very real affection in which I hold you, which has indeed grown with every day of our intercourse. And this, notwithstanding the difficult position in which we are often placed by laws that seem contradictory; laws which demand that the authority of the general should at times—at moments of danger—be balanced by the mysterious power of Florence, whereof I am to-day the humble representative . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

This order that I have just received was written by you?

TRIVULZIO

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

By your own hand?

TRIVULZIO

Undoubtedly. Why this question?

PRINZIVALLE

These two letters—you recognise them?

TRIVULZIO

Perhaps. I know not; what do they contain? . . . I must first . . .

PRINZIVALLE

There is no need. I know.

TRIVULZIO

Are they the two letters you intercepted, as I hoped you might? . . . I see that the test was good.

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

You are not dealing with a child. Let us not fall back on such wretched tricks as these; or prolong an interview that I am eager to end, that, indeed, delays a reward which no triumph in Florence could ever equal! . . . In these letters you have most basely and falsely denounced every action of mine. Was this from pure malice, or to provide the treacherous avarice of Florence with the indispensable excuse for dealing cheaply with a victorious mercenary? . . . In these letters all things are distorted with so fiendish a skill, that there are moments when I doubt my own innocence. My every action has been disfigured, degraded, besmirched; and this from the very first week of the siege, down to the hour when my eyes were opened—the fortunate hour when I resolved to justify your suspicions. I have had your letters carefully copied—I have sent them to Florence. I intercepted the answer. Your word is accepted, you are believed: the more readily inasmuch as you had been supplied with the theme of your accusation. I am judged, unheard; I am condemned to death . . . And I know full well that not all the innocence of the archangels could help me to escape from the damning proofs that you have provided . . . And therefore do I now spring forward, burst your puny chains, and take the initiative. Hitherto, I have been no traitor; but since these two letters fell into my hands I have been preparing your ruin. This night I shall sell you, you and your sorry masters; I shall deal you the cruellest, the most fatal blow that lies in my power. And I shall regard it as the noblest deed of all my life, thus to have humbled the one city that exalts treachery to a virtue, and seeks to govern the universe by means of fraud and hypocrisy, lies, ingratitude, and villainy . . . For this evening, thanks to me, Pisa, your ancient enemy, who prevents you, and shall prevent you, whilst her walls stand, from spreading corruption over all the world—this evening Pisa shall be saved, and shall lift her head to breathe defiance once more . . . Ah, do not rise, or make vain gestures . . . My measures have all been taken, and they are inevitable; you are in my power; and even as I hold you now do I seem to hold in my hand the destiny of Florence . . .

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

[TRIVULZIO draws his dagger and aims a swift blow at PRINZIVALLE.]

TRIVULZIO

Not yet . . . Not while my hands are free . . .

[PRINZIVALLE, warding off the blow with his arm, has thrown up the weapon, which strikes him in the face. He seizes TRIVULZIO by the wrist.]

PRINZIVALLE

I was not prepared for this spasm of terror . . . See, I hold you now, and can crush you with one hand . . . I have only to lower this dagger . . . It would seem already to be seeking your throat. What, you say nothing? are you not afraid, then?

TRIVULZIO

[Coldly.] No; use the dagger, it is your right. I knew my life was forfeit.

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

[Loosening his hold.] Ah . . . But, truly, then, this thing is strange that you have done . . . And even very rare . . . There are not many soldiers who would so readily clasp the hand of death; and I should not have thought that within so feeble a body . . .

TRIVULZIO

You men of the sword are only too apt to believe that there is no other courage than that which dwells at the end of a blade . . .

PRINZIVALLE

You may be right . . . It is well . . . You are not free, but no harm shall be done you . . . We serve different gods, you and I. [He wipes the blood from his face.] Ah, the blow was not unskilful . . . A little too hasty, but not lacking in vigour . . . It went within an ace of . . . And now, tell me, what would you do, if you held a man in your hands who had been so nigh despatching you to a world whither no one is anxious to go?

Monna Vanna

TRIVULZIO

I should not spare him.

PRINZIVALLE

I do not understand you . . . You are strange . . . Confess that it was a despicable thing to write those letters. I have shed my blood for Florence in three great battles; I have never spared myself, I have strained every nerve, the gain was all yours. I was a faithful servant to the Republic, nor did one single thought of disloyalty ever enter my heart . . . You must have known this, you who were always spying upon me . . . And yet, in your letters, some vile malice or hatred caused you to distort every action of mine, every step that I took. I thought only of Florence; you heaped slander on slander, and lie upon lie . . .

TRIVULZIO

The facts were fallacious—that mattered but little. It was for me to guard against the dangerous hour when the soldier, flushed by two or three victories, is on the point of no longer obeying the master he serves, whose mission is loftier than his. That hour had sounded, as this hour proves. The people of Florence held you too fondly. It is for us to shatter their idols. They show some resentment at the time, but they have created us that we may oppose their dangerous caprices; and it seemed to me that the hour had come to mark out their idol for destruction. I warned Florence. She knew what my falsehoods meant . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

The hour had not come, and would never have come, but for your shameful letters . . .

TRIVULZIO

It might have come, and that was sufficient . . .

PRINZIVALLE

What! Is an innocent man to be sacrificed to a mere possibility? Offered up in cold blood to a danger that never might threaten?

TRIVULZIO

What is the life of one man to the safety of Florence!

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

You believe, then, in the destiny of Florence, in her work, her existence? She must be something, then, that I do not understand? . . .

TRIVULZIO

Yes, I believe only in her; the rest is nothing to me . . .

PRINZIVALLE

After all, it may be so . . . And you are right, since you believe . . . I have no country, I cannot tell. There are times when I regret that I have no country . . . But I have something that you never shall have—that no man ever has had as much as I . . . That atones for all . . . Go; let us part; we have no time to weigh these enigmas . . . We are far removed from each other, and yet there are points where we almost touch . . . Each man has his destiny . . . Some follow an idea, and others a desire; and it would be as hard for you to change your idea as for me to change my desire . . . Fare you well, Trivulzio; we go different ways . . . Give me your hand.

Monna Vanna,

TRIVULZIO

Not yet. I shall give you my hand on the day of punishment . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Be it so; to-day you have lost; you will win to-morrow . . . [He calls "VEDIO!"] [VEDIO comes in.]

VEDIO

Master! . . . What, you are wounded, the blood is flowing . . .

PRINZIVALLE

No matter . . . Summon the two guards. Let them take this man away; but see that they do him no injury. . . . He is an enemy whom I love . . . Let them bestow him in some safe place, where no one shall see him . . . They answer for his safety, and shall set him free at my command . . .

[VEDIO goes, leading TRIVULZIO. PRINZIVALLE stands before a mirror and examines his wound.]

PRINZIVALLE

The wound is not deep, but it has bitten into my face . . . Who could have thought that so feeble and haggard a man . . . [VEDIO returns.] You have done as I bid you?

Monna Vanna

VEDIO

Yes. Master, this will mean ruin . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Ruin! . . . Ah, that I could be ruined thus each day to the day of my death! . . . Ruin, Vedio! . . . Why, never yet in this world will a legitimate revenge have brought to a man a happiness like mine—a happiness of which he has dreamed ever since he first learnt to dream . . . I have waited and prayed for it! I would have allowed no crime to stop me, for it was mine, it belonged to me, and I was bound to have it; and now that my star, urged on by justice, by pity, sends it to me, upon its silvery rays, you speak of ruin! . . . Oh, poor men with cold hearts! . . . Poor men without love! . . . Do you not know, then, that at this moment my destiny is being balanced in the sky, and that they are granting me the share of a hundred lovers, the share of a thousand joys! . . . 'Ah, I know it! . . . I touch the moment when those marked out for grand disaster or triumph suddenly find themselves on the topmost peak of their life, where all things belong to them and obey them, and become moulded to their hand! . . . And what matters the rest, and all that comes after! . . . There is an ecstasy too great for man, and it crushes him who achieves it! . . .

Monna Vanna

VEDIO

[Approaching him with a linen bandage.]
The blood still flows; let me bind up your face.

PRINZIVALLE

Yes. Since it must be . . . But see that your bandages do not cover my eyes. [Looking into the mirror.] Ah, I seem more like a patient shrinking from a surgeon's knife than a lover who soon will be joyfully welcoming his love! . . . [He shifts the bandage.] And you, Vedio, my poor Vedio, what will become of you?

VEDIO

Master, where you go I go too . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

Nay, you must leave me . . . I know not whither I shall go, nor what will become of me . . . Do you make good your escape; none will follow you, whereas if you go with your master . . . In these coffers is gold; take it, it is yours, I need it no longer . . . Are the waggons ready, the flocks all gathered?

VEDIO

They are in front of the tent.

PRINZIVALLE

Good. When I give the signal you will do what has to be done. [The sound of a gunshot is heard from afar.] What is that?

VEDIO

A shot has been fired at the outposts.

PRINZIVALLE

Who gave the order? . . . It must be a mistake . . . If they should have fired at her! Did you not tell . . .

Monna Vanna

VEDIO

Yes. It is impossible. I placed a number of guards there, who will bring her to you the moment that she arrives.

PRINZIVALLE

Go and see. [Exit VEDIO.]

[For a moment PRINZIVALLE remains alone. VEDIO returns, raises the curtain at the entrance, and murmurs "Master." Then he withdraws and MONNA VANNA, wrapped in a long mantle, appears, and pauses on the threshold. PRINZIVALLE trembles, and moves toward her.]

VANNA

[In a stifled voice.] I have come as you bade me . . .

PRINZIVALLE

There is blood on your hand: are you wounded? . . .

VANNA

A ball touched my shoulder . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

What? When? . . . This is terrible . . .

VANNA

As I drew near the camp.

PRINZIVALLE

Who fired the shot? . . .

VANNA

I know not; the man fled.

PRINZIVALLE

Are you in pain? . . .

VANNA

No.

PRINZIVALLE

Shall I have the wound dressed?

VANNA

No. It is nothing. [A moment's silence.]

PRINZIVALLE

Your mind is made up? . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

Shall I remind you of the conditions?

VANNA

There is no need.

PRINZIVALLE

You have no regrets? . . .

VANNA

Was it stipulated that I should come without regrets?

PRINZIVALLE

Your husband consents? . . .

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

There still is time if you wish to renounce . . .

VANNA

No.

PRINZIVALLE

But why are you doing this?

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Because out yonder they perish of hunger, and to-morrow a still swifter death would await them . . .

PRINZIVALLE

There is no other reason?

VANNA

What other could there be? . . .

PRINZIVALLE

I can conceive that a virtuous woman . . .

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

One who loves her husband . . .

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

Deeply?

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

You are clad only in your mantle?

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

You have seen the chariots and flocks in front of the tent?

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

There are two hundred waggons filled with the best Tuscan wheat; two hundred others laden with forage, and with fruit and wine from Sienna. There are thirty more filled with German powder, and fifteen smaller ones laden with lead; and around them are six hundred oxen from Apulia, and twelve hundred sheep. They await your order to march into Pisa. Would you care to see them start?

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

Come then to the door of my tent.

[He raises the tapestry, gives the order, and makes a signal. A sound is heard as of a vague and mighty movement. Torches are *kindled and waved to and fro.

Monna Vanna

Whips are cracked and waggons creak. There is the bleating of sheep and the lowing of oxen.
VANNA and PRINZIVALLE, erect on the threshold of the tent, watch for a moment the enormous convoy as it starts forth, with torches flaming in the starry night.]*

PRINZIVALLE

From this night, thanks to you, Pisa will cease to be hungry. She is invincible now, and to-morrow will know the glory of a joy and triumph for which none had dared any longer to hope . . . Are you satisfied?

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

Let us close the tent then; and give me your hand. The evening is still mild, but the night will be cold. You have no weapons concealed about you, no poison?

Monna Vanna

VANNA

I have only my sandals and this mantle.
Search me if you are afraid . . .

PRINZIVALLE

It is not for myself that I fear, but for you . . .

VANNA

I place the life of my people high above all . . .

PRINZIVALLE

It is well, and you have done right . . .
Come, sit here . . . It is a warrior's couch, rugged and fierce, narrow as a tomb, and but little worthy of you . . . Lie here, on these tiger-skins, that have never yet felt the gentle touch of a woman . . . Place this soft fur at your feet . . . It is the skin of a lynx that an African monarch gave me on the night of a victory . . .

[VANNA sits, closely wrapped in her mantle.]

PRINZIVALLE

The light of the lamp is falling on your eyes; shall I move it?

Monna Vanna

VANNA

It matters not . . .

PRINZIVALLE

[Kneeling at the foot of the couch and seizing VANNA's hand.] Giovanna! . . . [VANNA starts up in surprise and looks at him.] Oh, Vanna, my Vanna . . . for I, too, used to call you thus . . . Now I tremble as I speak your name . . . It has so long remained trebly sealed in my heart that it cannot escape without breaking its prison . . . Indeed, it is my heart, it is all I have . . . In each one of its syllables lies all my life, and as I pronounce them I feel my life flow from me . . . It was familiar to me; I thought I knew it; I had said it again and again to myself, until I ceased to be afraid: I had spoken it every hour of every day, like a great word of love that one yearns to utter, if it be only once, in the presence of her whom it has so long evoked in vain . . . I thought that my lips had shaped themselves to its form; that at the long-sought-for moment they would pronounce it so softly, so meekly, so humbly, with so profound and mighty a yearning, that she who should hear it would know the distress and the love that it held. . . . Whereas to-day it is merely a shadow. It is no longer the same . . . My fears and sorrows have bruised it and crushed it, and I can scarcely recognise it as it leaves my lips. All the meaning and adoration that I have placed within it come now to break my strength and extinguish my voice . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Who are you?

PRINZIVALLE

You do not know me? . . . I recall no memory? . . . Ah, the marvels that time effaces! . . . But it is true that I alone had seen those marvels . . . And it is better, perhaps, that they should be forgotten . . . I shall hope no longer, I shall have fewer regrets! . . . No, I am nothing to you . . . A poor wretch, who for one single instant wistfully gazes at what has been the aim of his life; an unhappy man who asks nothing, who knows not even what it is he should ask; and yet he would, were it possible to him, tell you before you go of what you have been to him, and will be, to the very end of his life . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

You know me then? . . . Who are you? . . .

PRINZIVALLE

You do not remember the man who is looking at you now, as, in a fairy world, one would look at the very source of one's joy and existence? . . .

VANNA

No . . . 'At least I do not believe . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Yes, you have forgotten. . . . And I was sure, alas, that you had forgotten! . . . You were eight years old and I twelve when I met you for the first time . . .

VANNA

Where? . . .

PRINZIVALLE

At Venice, one Sunday in June . . . My father, the old goldsmith, brought your mother a necklace of pearls. She was admiring the necklace—I strayed into the garden . . . I found you there, by the side of a pond, in a grove of myrtle . . . A slender golden ring had fallen into the water . . . You were crying on the bank . . . I sprang into the pond . . . The ring was glittering on the marble basin; I seized it and placed it on your finger . . . I was nearly drowned . . . But you kissed me and were happy . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

It was a fair-haired child named Gianello. Are you Gianello?

PRINZIVALLE

Yes.

VANNA

Who could have recognised you? . . . And besides, your face is covered with bandages . . . I can only see your eyes . . .

PRINZIVALLE

[Shifting the bandages.] Do you know me now that I move them?

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Yes, perhaps . . . I seem to . . . For your smile is still that of a child . . . But your are wounded, the blood is flowing . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Ah, it is not my first wound . . . But that any one should have hurt you . . .

VANNA

Let me adjust your bandage, it is badly tied. [She winds the linen round his cheek.] I have often tended the wounded in this war . . . Yes, yes, I remember . . . I can see the garden again, with its pomegranates, its roses and laurels. We played there more than once, in the afternoon, when the sun shone hot on the sand . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Twelve times in all—I kept count . . . I can tell you each game that we played, and every word that you said . . .

VANNA

Then, one day, I remember, I waited—for

Monna Vanna

I loved you well, you were so solemn, so quiet, and treated me like a little queen . . . But you never came back . . .

PRINZIVALLE

My father took me to Africa . . . There we got lost in the desert . . . Then I was taken prisoner by the Arabs, the Turks, the Spaniards—that was my life. When I saw Venice again your mother was dead; the garden lay waste . . . I sought you in vain . . . Till, at last, I heard of you, thanks to your beauty, which no man could ever forget who once had beheld it . . .

VANNA

You knew me at once when I came in?

PRINZIVALLE

Had ten thousand women come into my tent, every one with a face like yours and clad alike and equally beautiful, ten thousand sisters whom their own kindred could not distinguish, I should have risen and taken you by the hand and said, "This is she." . . . It is strange, is it not, that an image one loves should thus be able to dwell in the heart; for in this heart of mine yours lived so profoundly that it grew and it changed . . . It was different to-day from what it was yesterday; it blossomed, it became more beautiful; and the years adorned it with the gifts they bring to the budding child . . . And yet, when I saw you again it seemed at first as though my eyes deceived me . . . My memory, that had so faithfully treasured your beauty, had yet been too timid, too halting; it had not dared to endow you with all the glory which so suddenly flashed on my sight. I was like a man who remembers a flower he has only seen once as he crossed the garden in twilight, and suddenly beholds a hundred thousand flowers beneath the radiant light of the sun . . . You came in, and I saw the brow again that I knew so well, the hair, and the eyes; I saw the soul in the face I adored . . . But its beauty humbled the one that I had been silently storing for days and days, and months without end, and year after year—the beauty that had fed on a halting memory, and fallen so immeasurably short of the real . . .

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Yes, you loved me as one loves at that age; but time and absence throw a glamour over love . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Men often say they have loved only once in their life, but it rarely is true . . . To disguise their indifference, or their desire, they lay claim to the wonderful sorrow of those who were born for a single love; and when one of these tries to tell of the deep and the dolorous truth that has furrowed his life, the words that the fortunate lovers have used so freely have lost all their strength, all their gravity: and she who listens will unconsciously degrade the poor sacred words, often so full of sadness, to the trivial, playful meaning they have for the majority of men . . .

VANNA

I shall not do that. I can understand the love for which we all yearn when our life begins; the love we renounce because years—although mine are few—put an end to many things . . . But, tell me, when you passed through Venice again and had found trace of me.—tell me what happened then? You made no effort to see the woman whom you had loved so deeply? . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

At Venice I learned that your mother was dead, that her fortune was lost, and that you were about to marry a great Tuscan noble, the richest and most powerful of all in Pisa, to whom you would be as a queen, adored and happy . . . I was an adventurer without a home, without a country—what was there that I could offer? . . . Destiny seemed to demand the sacrifice I grudgingly made to my love. Ah, how often have I wandered around the walls of this city, and clung to the chains of the gate, in my fear lest my longing to see you should overwhelm me, and disturb the love and the happiness that you had found . . . I hired out my sword, I engaged in two or three wars; I was a mercenary, and my name became known . . . I waited for the days to come, though hope had left me; till at last Florence despatched me to Pisa . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

How feeble and cowardly men become when they love! . . . Understand me well; I do not love you, nor can I tell whether I could ever have loved you . . . But it makes the very soul of love leap and cry in my heart when I find that a man who pretended to love as I might myself have loved, had not more courage in the face of love . . .

PRINZIVALLE

It was not courage that failed me . . . I had need of more than you think to be able to go . . . But it was too late . . .

VANNA

It was not too late when you left Venice. When one finds a love that fills a life, it never can be too late . . . Such a love never renounces. Expecting nothing, it hopes. And it persists, still, when it has ceased to hope. Had I loved as you say you loved, then I would have . . . Ah, one cannot say what one would have done . . . But this much I know: fate should not have wrenched my happiness from me without a struggle . . . I should have cried to fate, "Hence, hence, I pass here!" . . . I should have forced the very stones to side with me! And whatever the cost, the man whom I loved should have learnt of my love, and himself have pronounced the sentence, and pronounced it more than once! . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

[Seeking her hand.] You do not love him, Vanna?

VANNA

Whom?

PRINZIVALLE

Guido.

VANNA

[Withdrawing her hand.] Do not take my hand. I cannot give it to you. I see I must make myself clear. When Guido married me I was alone, almost poor; and the woman who is alone and poor soon falls victim to calumny, especially if her face be fair, and she scornful of artifice or falsehood . . . To these calumnies Guido paid no heed; he had faith in me, and his faith pleased me. He made me happy; at least as happy as one can be when one has renounced the vague and extravagant dreams which seem beyond human life; and I almost hope to convince you, too, that one can be happy without spending one's days in search of a happiness that no man ever has known. I love Guido to-day with a love less strange than the one you imagine you feel; but mine, at least, is steadier, calmer, more faithful, and more sure . . . That is the love that fortune has given me; I accepted it with my eyes open; I shall have no other; and if anyone breaks it that one will not be I . . . So you see you have misunderstood me. . . . When I tried to point out to you what I thought was an error of yours, it was not of you that I spoke, it was not of us: I spoke in the name of a love of which a glimpse descends on the heart at the very first dawn: a love which exists, perhaps, but that is not mine or yours; for you have not done what such a love would do . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

You judge me harshly, Vanna, or rather this love of mine. You judge it with all too little knowledge of what it has done, and had to suffer, in order to bring about this one happy moment that would most surely plunge every other love into despair . . . But though it had done nothing, and attempted nothing, I know of its existence, I who am its victim, whose life it has seized: I who bear it within me, and have lost all that makes for the joy and glory of man! . . . Ah, believe me, Vanna, and you must believe me, for I am of those who ask for nothing and hope for nothing! . . . You are in my tent now, and at my mercy . . . I have only to say a word, to stretch out my hand, and all is mine that the ordinary lover demands . . . But you know as well as I that the love of which I have spoken craves other things; therefore I ask that you no longer doubt me . . . I took your hand because I thought you would believe me . . . I shall not touch it again, my lips shall not press it; but, at least, Vanna, when we shall part to meet no more, at least know what kind of love mine has been, that it halted only before the impossible!

Monna Vanna

VANNA

From the moment that it could regard anything as impossible, is not doubt permitted? I demand no superhuman ordeals, no terrible obstacles to be overcome. I ask for no proofs of this kind, I am only too willing to believe . . . Indeed, it is for the sake of your happiness, and mine, that I still would try to doubt . . . In a love as mighty as yours there is something sacred, that could not but disturb the coldest of women . . . And therefore do I probe into what you have done, and should be almost happy could I discover nothing that bears the stamp of this mortal passion, on which fate so seldom smiles . . . And I should have been convinced that I had found nothing, but for this last act of yours; for when I remember that you have madly wrecked your future, your fame, all that you have in the world, to bring me here for an hour beneath this tent, then am I forced to admit that possibly your love may be what you say . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

This last act is the only one that proves nothing . . .

VANNA

How? . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

I prefer that you should know the truth. In causing you to come to me here, in saving Pisa in your name, I have sacrificed nothing.

VANNA

I do not understand . . . Have you not betrayed your country, effaced your past services, ruined your future? What stands before you? Is it not exile or death?

PRINZIVALLE

In the first place I have no country. Otherwise, had my love been never so great, I should not have betrayed it for that love . . . But I am only a mercenary, faithful when others are faithful, a traitor when they betray . . . I have been falsely accused by the Florentine Commissioners, and condemned without trial by a Republic of merchants, whose ways you know as well as I. I was aware that I was lost; and the thing I have done to-night, far from hastening my ruin, will perhaps save me, if that still be possible . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

So what you have sacrificed for my sake counts but little?

PRINZIVALLE

It counts nothing at all . . . I could not but tell you. I should have no joy in a smile of yours that I had purchased with a lie . . .

VANNA

Ah, Gianello, Gianello, this is worth more than love and its noblest proofs! . . . You need no longer seek the hand that fled from you before. Take it . . .

PRINZIVALLE

I had rather that love had won it! . . . But what matter, after all! . . . It belongs to me, Vanna: I hold it between mine, I drink its fragrance, I live its life, it is one with me—I lose myself for a moment in the sweet illusion . . . Ah, the dear hand! I open it, close it, as though it could answer me in the secret, mysterious language of lovers; I press my kisses upon it, and you still let it lie here . . . You forgive me, then, the cruel ordeal to which I exposed you? . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

I should have done the same thing; better, perhaps, or worse, had I been in your place . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Did you know who I was when you agreed to come to my tent? . . .

VANNA

No one knew. There were strange rumours . . . According to some, Prinzivalle was a horrible old man; others declared him a young prince of marvellous beauty . . .

PRINZIVALLE

But Guido's father saw me; did he say nothing? . . .

VANNA

No.

PRINZIVALLE

You did not question him? . . .

VANNA

No.

PRINZIVALLE

But did your heart not fail you when you came in the night, helpless, to the tent of an unknown savage? . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

The sacrifice had to be made . . .

PRINZIVALLE

And when you saw me?

VANNA

At first the bandages hid your face . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Yes, but afterwards, Vanna, when I raised them?

VANNA

Then it was different, and I already knew you . . . But you, when you saw me enter the tent—what was in your mind then; what had you intended to do? . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Ah, how can I tell! . . . I knew I was lost, I had the wild craving to drag all things down with me . . . And I hated you because of this love of mine! I marvel now at myself when I think of it . . . There needed but a word that was not yours, a gesture different from your gestures, to unchain the brute within me and fan my hatred . . . But the moment I saw you I realised how impossible it was . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

So did I realise it, too, and all fear left me, for we understood each other without a word being said. And it is all very strange . . . I should have done this thing, too, I believe, had I loved like you . . . Indeed, there are moments, as I listen to you, when I fancy that I am speaking, and that your words are my words, and you hearing what I am saying . . .

PRINZIVALLE

I, too, Vanna, I felt at once that the wall which divides us from all other beings was growing transparent; it was as though I had plunged my hands into a flowing stream, and withdrawn them sparkling with light, shining with confidence and sincerity . . . And it seemed to me that men were changed, that all I had hitherto thought had been wrong . . . Most of all did I feel that I myself was changed, emerging at last as from a long imprisonment; that the gates were opening, flowers and leaves entwining around the bars; that the snows were melting on the far horizon, and the pure air of the morning entering my soul and breathing upon my love! . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA .

In me, too, there was a change. I was surprised to find myself speaking to you as I did from the very beginning . . . I am habitually silent . . . I have never spoken thus to any man, save it be to Marco, Guido's father, and even with him it is different . . . He is wrapped in a thousand dreams; our conversations are rare . . . and, as for the others, there is always a look in their eyes that chills me. How dare I tell them I love them, or that I yearn to know what is passing in their heart? . . . Your eyes do not repel, they do not alarm . . . I felt at once that I knew you, though I could not recall where it was I had seen you before . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

Could you have loved me, Vanna, had my evil star not brought me to you when it was too late? . . .

VANNA

Were I to tell you that I could have loved you, it would be the same as my telling you that I love you now, Gianello, and you know as well as I that cannot be . . . But we speak to each other here as though we were on a desert island . . . Were I alone in the world there would be no more to say . . . But we forget the suffering that another endures, while we two smile at the past . . . When I think of Guido's sorrow as I left Pisa, the despair in his eyes, his haggard face—oh, I can wait no longer! . . . Dawn must be close at hand, and I am so eager to know! . . . I hear a footstep, some one is passing the tent . . . People are whispering behind the curtain . . . Listen, listen! . . . What is it?

[The sound of whispers and hurried footsteps is heard outside the tent. Then the voice of VEDIO from without.]

Monna Vanna

VEDIO

[Off.] Master!

PRINZIVALLE

It is Vedio. Come in! Well?

VEDIO

[At the entrance of the tent.] Quick, quick! Master, you must fly! Lose not an instant! Messer Maladura, the second Commissioner of Florence . . .

PRINZIVALLE

He was at Bibbiena . . .

VEDIO

He has returned . . . Six hundred Florentines are with him . . . I saw them pass. The camp is in uproar . . . He brings orders . . . He proclaims you traitor . . . He now seeks Trivulzio, and if he should find him while you are still here . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Come, Vanna . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Whither shall I go?

FRINZIVALLE

Vedio, with two men on whom I can rely, shall escort you to Pisa . . .

VANNA

And you, what will you do?

PRINZIVALLE

I know not, and it matters little. The world is wide enough—I shall find shelter.

VEDIO

Oh, master, beware! They hold the country all round the town, and Tuscany is full of spies . . .

VANNA

Come to Pisa.

PRINZIVALLE

With you? . . .

VANNA

Yes.

PRINZIVALLE

I cannot . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

If only for a few days . . . to put them off the scent . . .

PRINZIVALLE

What will your husband do? . . .

VANNA

He will not fail in his duty to a guest . . .

PRINZIVALLE

Will he believe you when you tell him? . . .

VANNA

Yes . . . —If he did not believe me . . .
But he will, he must . . . —Come . . .

PRINZIVALLE

No.

VANNA

Why?—What do you fear?

PRINZIVALLE

It is for you that I fear . . .

VANNA

For me? For me the danger is the same whether I be alone or with you. It is for you we must fear, for you who have saved Pisa; now it is right that Pisa should save you . . . You come under my protection, and I stand surety for you . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

So be it: I will go with you . . .

VANNA

You could give me no better proof of your love . . . Come. Let us lose no time . . . Throw open the tent . . .

[PRINZIVALLE, followed by VANNA, moves to the entrance and throws the tapestry wide open. There is a vast murmur of voices and clashing of arms; but above all is heard the sound of distant bells, pealing joyfully, that burst sharply upon the silence of the night. Far away in the distance Pisa is seen on the horizon, brilliantly illuminated. Great bonfires throw a mighty glare on the dark sky.]

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

Look, Vanna, look!

VANNA

What is it, Gianello? . . . Oh, I understand! . . . These are the fires of joy that they have kindled, to celebrate what you have done . . . The walls are aglow, the ramparts glitter, the Campanile shines like a torch of gladness. See how the radiant towers are whispering to the stars! . . . And the very streets are reflected in the sky: I can recognise the road I trod this evening! . . . There is the piazza with its dome of fire; and the Camp Santo, that makes an island of shadows! . . . One could almost imagine that life, but now at its very last gasp, had rushed back to Pisa, leaping from spire to spire, flinging itself across the skies, flooding the walls, the whole country, and now making signals to us, and calling us back . . . Listen, listen! . . . Hark to the shouts, the ecstasy, the delirium, rising and swelling, as though the sea were invading Pisa! . . . Hark to the bells, the bells that sound as they did at my wedding . . . Ah, I am happy, happy, and happiest of all to owe my happiness to you, to you who have loved me best! . . . Come, my Gianello! [She kisses him on the brow.] That is the only kiss I can give you . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

Oh, my Giovanna, it is the most exquisite kiss that love could hope for! . . . But see, you tremble; your knees bend under you! . . . Come, lean on me, put your arm round me . . .

VANNA

It is nothing: I am faint—I have overtaxed my strength. Help me, carry me! Let nothing hinder my first happy steps . . . How beautiful is the night beneath the wakening dawn! . . . Quick! Let us hasten, it is time. We must arrive before the joy has faded . . .

[They go out together, PRINZIVALLE supporting VANNA.]

ACT III

State Apartment of GUIDO COLONNA

(Lofty windows, porticos, marble columns, &c. To the left, at back, a terrace, the approach to which is by a great double staircase. On the balustrade of the terrace are huge vases filled with flowers. In the centre of the room, between the columns, ample marble steps lead to the terrace, which commands a view over a great part of the town. Enter MARCO, GUIDO, BORSO, and TORELLO.)

GUIDO

I YIELDED to you, to her, to every one; but now it is only just that I should have my turn. I have been silent, I have held my breath, I have hidden—as a coward might hide while thieves are plundering his house.

Monna Vanna

But, in my degradation, I have still retained my honour . . . You have made a tradesman of me, a huckster, a weaver of cunning bargains . . . But now the dawn has come . . . I have not budged from my place . . . A contract was made, I had to respect it: I had to purchase your food . . . This night, this noble night, belonged to the buyer . . . Ah, who knows, it was not too high a price, perhaps, to pay for this wheat, for all these sheep and oxen . . . Now you have eaten your fill, and I have paid . . . Now I am free, I am master once more; and I hurl my shame from me! . . .

MARCO

My son, I know not what your intentions may be, and no one has the right to intrude upon a grief like yours . . . Words cannot soften it, and I can well understand that the happiness which it has caused, which surrounds you on every side, can only embitter it, and render it more poignant . . . The city is saved, but we almost regret the salvation which has cost you so dear; and we bend our heads before you who have had to bear the whole burden . . . And yet, could we recall yesterday, I should still have to act as I did, mark out the same victims, and plead for the same injustice; for the man who would be just is compelled all his life sorrowfully to choose between two or three acts of varying injustice . . . I know not what to say to you; but if this voice of mine that once you loved could for the last time reach your heart, I would beg of you, my son, not blindly to follow the first counsels of anger and grief . . . Wait, at least, until the dangerous hour be past which impels us to utter words that cannot be recalled . . . Vanna will soon be here. Do not judge her to-day. Do nothing irrevocable . . . For all that one does and says beneath the empire of an overpowering grief is so naturally, so cruelly, irrevocable! . . . Vanna will return, rejoicing, despairing . . . Do not reproach her . . . If you do not feel yourself strong enough to speak to her as you will speak after many days, let some time pass before you see her . . . For in us poor creatures, who are merely the playthings of irresistible forces, there resides so much goodness, and justice, and wisdom, in the years that pass; and the only words that count, that we must eagerly grope for when misfortune blinds us, are those that we shall pronounce when full understanding has come, when we have forgiven and once more begun to love . . .

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

You have finished? It is well. This is no longer the hour for honeyed phrases, nor is there any one here to-day whom they still can deceive . . . I have suffered you, and for the last time, to say what you had to say; for I was curious to know what your wisdom could offer me in exchange for the life it has so effectually ruined . . . See what it gives me! To wait, to be patient, to accept, forget, to pardon and weep! . . . Well, no! That does not suffice! . . . I had rather not be wise, and get rid of my shame! Words cannot do this for me . . . And as for my intentions, they are very simple—I shall act as you would have urged me to act but a few years ago. A man has taken Vanna from me; Vanna is no longer mine while this man exists. For I, you see, am guided by other rules than those that govern the verb and the adjective. I obey the great law before which every man bends whose heart is alive within him . . . Pisa has food now, weapons; she can eat, she can fight; very well, I claim my share. From this day onwards her fighting men are mine, or, at least, the best of them—those I myself recruited and paid for, out of my purse. I have discharged my duty to Pisa—now I demand my own. These men shall not go back to her until they have done what I in my turn have now the right to exact . . . As for the rest—for Vanna—I forgive her, or shall forgive her when this man has ceased to be . . . She has been deceived, she has been led astray; but, at least, there was heroism in what she did . . . The foulest advantage was taken of her mercy, her greatness of soul . . . Be it so . . . To forget may be impossible; but at least this deed of hers may fade so remotely into the past that it shall hide itself from the love that seeks it . . . But there exists one creature whom I shall never behold without shame and horror . . . A man is here whose sole mission in life was to be the guide, the prop, of a great and noble happiness. He has become its enemy, and its scourge; and there shall happen before you all a thing that is terrible and yet is just . . . You shall see a son, who, in a world for a moment out of gear, judges his own father, denies him, and curses him; thrusts him from his presence, despises and hates him! . . .

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

MARCO

Curse me, my son, but pardon her . . . If there be in this heroic act that has saved so many lives a fault that cannot be pardoned, then is that fault all mine, but the heroism hers . . . My advice was good; but advice was easy for me, who bore no share in the sacrifice; and to-day, when it deprives me of all that I hold dearest in the world, it seems still better to me than it did before . . . I have no right to quarrel with your judgment; when I was younger I should have judged like you . . . I go, my son, and you shall behold me no more; I can well understand that my presence is odious to you—and yet I shall try to see you again without being seen by you . . . And since I depart, scarce daring to hope that I may live to see the hour when you will pardon the wrong I have done you—for my own past reminds me that pardon comes slowly when one is still in the prime of life—since I leave you thus, let me, at least, be convinced that I take with me all your hatred and bitterness, all your cruel memories; and that none will remain for her who is to come . . . Beyond this I have but one prayer . . . Let me, and for the last time, see her throw herself into your arms . . . Then I shall go without a murmur, without deeming you unjust . . . It is good that in human sorrow the oldest should take on his shoulders all that he can bear; seeing that he has but few steps before him ere his burden shall fall aside . . .

[Already during MARCO's last words, a vague and mighty murmur has been heard from without. In the silence that follows, this noise increases, drawing nearer and becoming more and more distinct. First there is an expectant stir, then still distant shouts of a crowd rushing from point to point. Soon the vague cries take form, and one hears from all sides, more and more clearly, repeated a thousand times, "Vanna, Vanna, our Monna Vanna! Glory to Monna Vanna, Vanna, Vanna, Vanna!""]

MARCO

[Rushing to the porticos that open on to the terrace.] It is Vanna! . . . She returns! . . . She is there! . . . They acclaim her; they acclaim her! Listen, listen!

[BORSO and TORELLO follow him to the terrace, while GUIDO remains alone, leaning against a pillar and looking straight before him. All this time the noise from without becomes louder and draws rapidly nearer.]

MARCO

[On the terrace.] Ah, see! The square, the streets, the windows, the trees, are all black with waving heads and arms! The roofs, the tiles, the leaves, would seem to be changed into men! . . . But where is Vanna?

Monna Vanna

I see only a cloud that shuts and opens . . .
Borso, my poor eyes play me false and betray my love . . . Old age and tears are blinding them . . . They cannot see the one creature they yearn for . . . Where is she, where is she? . . . Which way must I go to meet her? . . .

BORSO

[Holding him back.] No; do not go down;
the people are wild, they have lost all control.
They are mad with excitement; women are fainting, men trodden under foot! . . . Besides, it is useless; she comes, there she is, there she is! . . . See, she raises her head!
. . . She sees us! . . . She is hurrying to us! Ah, she looks up and smiles! . . .

MARCO

You see her, but I cannot! . . . These moribund eyes of mine can distinguish nothing! . . . For the first time I curse the old age that has taught me so much, and now hides this one thing from me! . . . But you who can see her, tell me how does she look?
. . . Can you see her face?

Monna Vanna

BORSO

She returns in triumph . . . She seems to shine on the people . . .

TORELLO

But who is the man who is walking by her side?

BORSO

I know not . . . I never have seen him; he hides his face . . .

MARCO

Hark, how they shout! . . . The whole palace trembles; the flowers fall from the vases on to the steps . . . The very flagstones seem to be rising beneath us to sweep us along in this overpowering gladness . . . Ah, I begin to see . . . They are close to the gates! The crowd divides . . .

BORSO

Yes, before Vanna. They are making a lane for her, a lane of triumph, of love . . . In her path they throw flowers, palm leaves, jewels . . . Mothers hold out their children for her to touch; men stoop to kiss the stones her feet have trodden . . . Be careful, they are too near us. They are mad with joy . . . If they reach these steps we shall all be swept away . . . Ah, it is well! The guards are rushing from the other side to bar the entrance! . . . I will give orders to shut out the people and close the gates, if there be yet time . . .

Monna Vanna

MARCO .

No, no! Let joy blossom here as it blossoms in the people's hearts! It is their vast love that speaks—let it do what it will! They have suffered enough! . . . Now that salvation has come let no barrier hold them back! Ah, my poor brave people, I, too, am drunk with joy; I raise my voice with yours! . . . Ah, Vanna, my Vanna! Is it you whom I see on the steps? . . . [He rushes forward to meet VANNA, but BORSO and TORELLO hold him back.] Come, Vanna, come! They are keeping me back! They are alarmed at this mighty joy! Come, Vanna, come! More beautiful than Judith, and purer than Lucrece! . . . Come! . . . Here, in the midst of the flowers! [He runs to the marble vases and seizes handfuls of flowers that he hurls to the foot of the stairs.] I, too, have flowers with which to greet the light! I, too, have lilies, laurels, and roses with which to crown glory!

Monna Vanna

[The clamour becomes more and more delirious. VANNA, accompanied by PRINZIVALLE, appears on the top of the steps and throws herself into MARCO's arms. The crowd invade the palace stairs and the terrace; but, nevertheless, remain at a certain distance from the group formed by VANNA, PRINZIVALLE, MARCO, BORSO, and TORELLO.]

VANNA

My father, I am happy . . .

MARCO

[Holding her close to him.] And I, too, my child, since I behold you again! . . . Let me look at you through my tears . . . I see you more radiant than had you descended from the depths of the sky, that now acclaims your return! . . . The horrible foe has not been able to rob your eyes of their light, nor a single smile from your lips! . . .

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Father, I will tell you . . . But where is Guido? . . . He must be the first to hear—to be comforted, for how can he know?

MARCO

Vanna, Vanna, he is there . . . Come . . . Me he repels, and justly, perhaps, but there is forgiveness for you, for your glorious fault; and I yearn to see you sink into his arms, that my last glance may fall upon your love . . .

[GUIDO steps forward to VANNA. She is about to speak—to throw herself into his arms—but GUIDO, with a brusque movement, stops and repels her, and addresses himself to those round about him.]

GUIDO

[In a strident and imperious voice.] Go, all! . . .

Monna Vanna.

VANNA

No, no! They must wait! . . . Guido, I must tell you; I must tell them all . . . Guido, listen!

GUIDO

[Stopping her and pushing her back, raising his voice in growing anger.] Do not come near me, do not touch me! [He advances towards the crowd, which has invaded the hall, but now recoils before him.] Have you not heard me? I bade you go! Leave us! You are the masters in your own homes, but here I rule! Borso, Torello, summon the guard! Ah! I see what it means! You have had your food, and now you would feast your eyes on this merry spectacle! . . . No, no, you have meat and wine; I have paid for you all; is that not enough? Go, I tell you! [Silent movement in the crowd, which slowly disperses.] Let none venture to linger! [He seizes his father violently by the arm.] You, too! You, above all! You more than the others, since the fault is yours! You shall not see my tears! I desire to be alone. Lonelier than the tomb, to know what I have to know! [Seeing PRINZIVALLE, who has not stirred.] And you? . . . Who are you who stand there like a veiled statue? . . . Are you death, or shame? Have you not understood that I told you to go? [He snatches a halberd from a guard.] Must I drive you hence with this halberd? . . . You touch your sword? . . . I, too, have a sword, but have other uses for it . . . Henceforth it serves against one man, and one man alone. . . . What veils are those that hide your head? . . . I am in no mood for a masquerade . . . You make no answer . . . I ask who you are? . . . Wait——

Monna Vanna

[He approaches and is about to tear away the bandages. VANNA rushes between and stops him.]

VANNA

Do not touch him! . . .

GUIDO

[In amazement.] Vanna, what, Vanna? Whence comes this sudden strength?

VANNA

It is he who saved me . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Hah! He saved you . . . When it was too late . . . A noble action, truly . . . It would have been better . . .

VANNA

[Feverishly.] But let me tell you, Guido, I implore you! One word, but one word! . . . He saved me, he spared me, respected me! . . . He comes here with me, under my protection . . . I have given my word, your word, ours! . . . You are angry now, but listen to me; only listen! . . .

GUIDO

Who is this man?

VANNA

Prinzivalle . . .

GUIDO

Who? What? . . . He, that man? That man Prinzivalle!

VANNA

Yes, yes! He is your guest! He puts himself into your hands! It is he who has saved me, Guido . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

[After a moment's stupor, with growing exultation and vehemence that render it impossible for VANNA to interrupt him.] Ah, this, my Vanna! . . . Ah, this falls on my soul like dew from the innermost heaven! . . . Ah, Vanna, my Vanna! . . . Yes, you are right; since it had to be done, that was the way to do it! Ah, I understand your stratagem now! Yes, I see it all! . . . But I did not know, I could not imagine! . . . There are women who would have killed him, as Judith killed Holophernes! . . . But his crime is greater than that of Holophernes, and calls for a greater vengeance! . . . Therefore you brought him here; therefore you have led him into the midst of his victims, who now shall become his executioners! . . . Ah, the magnificent triumph! . . . He followed you meekly, tenderly; and did not suspect that the kisses you gave him were kisses of hatred! . . . Here he is, caught in a trap! . . . Yes, you were right! To have killed him down there, alone in his tent, after his horrible crime—that would not have sufficed! . . . A doubt would have remained, we should not have seen him . . . All had known of the abominable compact; it was needful, therefore, that all should know the price to be paid for such treachery! . . . But how did you do it? . . . It is the greatest triumph that ever a woman . . . Ah, you shall tell them! [He rushes to the terrace and shouts at the top of his voice.] Prinzivalle! Prinzivalle! The enemy is here! We hold him!

Monna Vanna

VANNA

[Clinging to him and trying to keep him back.] No, no! Listen! Listen, Guido, I implore you! Guido, Guido, you are wrong!

GUIDO

[Shaking himself free, and shouting still louder.] Let me go! You shall see! They must all of them know, all! [Shouting to the crowd.] Come back, all of you! You may, you must! . . . And you, too, my father! You who are crouching there behind the pillars, as though expecting a god to spring forth to repair the wrong you caused, and restore me my happiness! Come back! This is joy, joy! There has been a great miracle! I want the very stones to hear what has happened! I need skulk in corners no longer—that is all over—I shall go hence purer than the purest, richer than those who have lost nothing! Ah, now you can acclaim my Vanna! I acclaim her with you, and louder than you all!

Monna Vanna

[The people hasten on to the terrace, he drags them into the hall.]

GUIDO

This time you shall see a spectacle! There is a justice, after all! . . . Ah, I knew it well, but could not believe that it could act so promptly! . . . I thought years and years must pass; that I should have to spend my life seeking my foe, in towns, in forests, in mountains! And, see, suddenly he springs up before me here, in this very room, on these steps, in front of us! An overpowering miracle! . . . But we shall hear . . . It is Vanna has done this! . . . And there shall be justice! [To MARCO, whom he seizes by the arm.] You see that man? . . .

Monna Vanna

MARCO

Yes; who is he?

GUIDO

You have seen him before . . . You have spoken to him . . . You were his complaisant messenger . . .

[PRINZIVALLE turns his face to MARCO, who recognises him.]

MARCO

Prinzivalle! [Movement in the crowd.]

GUIDO

Yes, yes, it is he; there is not the least doubt . . . Come nearer. Look at him, touch him! He may have some new message to send, perhaps . . . Ah, he is no longer the magnificent Prinzivalle! But for him there shall be no pity . . . He took, by a vile and monstrous artifice, the one thing in the world that I could not give; and now he he has come to me. He has been brought hither by justice, by a stratagem more marvellous than justice, to ask of me the one recompense I can afford . . . Am I not right to call it a miracle? Come nearer, nearer! Have no fear; he cannot escape! And yet, see that the doors are shut; we must not allow another miracle to snatch him from us . . . We shall not deal with him at once . . . There shall be prolonged pleasures in store for him . . . Ah, you, my brothers, to whom he caused so much suffering; you whom he sought to massacre, whose wives and children he sold into slavery, look at him now! Yes, this is he; and he is mine, he is yours, he is ours, I tell you! . . . He has made you suffer, but what has your suffering been compared with mine? . . . He shall be yours, very soon . . . My Vanna has led him to us, that our vengeance may blot out our shame! . . . [Addressing the crowd.] Stand witness, all of you! There must not be one shadow of doubt . . . Have you thoroughly realised what a miracle of heroism this is? . . . That man took Vanna from me . . . I was helpless, I could do nothing: you sold her . . . I have curses for none . . . The past is past . . . You had the right to prefer your life to my poor happiness . . . But Vanna, my Vanna, has known how to build love anew with the thing that had killed it . . . You destroyed; she has recreated . . . Vanna has done it! . . . She is greater than Lucrece or Judith, Lucrece who killed herself, and Judith who slew Holophernes! Ah, that, truly, would have been too mild, too simple, too silent! . . . Vanna does not slay in a closed tent: she brings the victim to us, alive, and offers him to us all! . . . And how has she done this? . . . Listen, she will tell! . . .

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Yes, I will tell you; but it is all quite different . . .

GUIDO

[Stopping her and throwing his arms round her.] Let me kiss you first, before them all . . .

VANNA

[Thrusting him violently back.] No, no! Not yet! . . . No, no, never again if you will not hear me! Listen, Guido! I speak of an honour more real, of a happiness greater than those that are blinding you! Ah, I am glad they have all returned! They will hear me, perhaps, before you will: they will understand before you understand! Listen, Guido! . . . You shall not touch me until you know . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

[Interrupting her, and again trying to embrace her.] Yes, yes, I know—but first of all I will . . .

VANNA

Listen, I tell you! In all my life I have never lied, but to-day I am telling the profoundest truth, the truth one speaks only once, that brings life or death in its train . . . Listen; and look at me well; look at me as though you had never seen me before this hour, which is the first, the only one when you truly can love me as I wish to be loved . . . I speak to you now in the name of the life we have lived together; in the name of all that I am, of all that you are to me! . . . Be capable of believing what, perhaps, can be scarcely believed . . . I was in this man's power . . . I had been handed over to him: he did not come near me, he did not touch me . . . I come from his tent as from the home of a brother . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

Why?

VANNA

Because he loves me . . .

GUIDO

Ah! so that was what you had to say to us! That was the miracle? . . . Yes, yes, at your very first words I saw there was something strange . . . It was only a flash, and I paid no heed . . . I thought that the trouble, the horror had . . . But I see now that we must look into it . . . So he did not come near you, you say; he did not touch you? . . .

VANNA

No.

GUIDO

Not even kiss you?

Monna Vanna

VANNA

I gave him one kiss on the brow, which he returned.

GUIDO

And you can tell this to me! . . . Vanna, Vanna, has this fearful night driven you mad?

VANNA

I tell you the truth.

GUIDO

The truth! Great God! it is that, and that alone, that I seek! But the truth must be human . . . What! a man who betrays his country, ruins his life, sets all the world against him for ever—and does all this that you should go to his tent alone—this man demands but a kiss on the brow; and comes to us here with you to make us believe it? . . . No, no; we must be just, and not gibe too much at misfortune . . . If this was all that he asked, why inflict so much misery upon our whole people? And flood me with such despair? . . . This night has lasted ten years: I have scarcely survived it! . . . Ah, had this been all he sought he could have saved us without this torture! . . . We should have welcomed him like a god, like a deliverer! You shake your head . . . See, the people shall judge, the people shall answer. [Addressing the crowd.] Have you heard? I know not why she has said these things; but what she has said is said, and you shall be judges . . . You will believe her, perhaps, since she has saved you . . . If you believe her, speak . . . Let those who believe her step out from the crowd! . . . Let them come to us here, and give the lie to poor human reason! . . . Let them come, all those who believe! . . . I am anxious to look at them, and see what sort of men they are! . . .

Monna Vanna

[MARCO alone stands forth from the crowd. One hears only faint, dim, and indistinct murmurs.]

MARCO

[Rushing forward.] I believe her!

GUIDO

You! You are their accomplice . . . But the others, the others, where are the rest who believe? . . . [To VANNA.] Have you heard? The people you saved shrink from the laughter that would burst from every corner of the hall . . . The few who murmured have not dared to show themselves, and I——

Monna Vanna

VANNA

They have no cause to believe me; but you, you who loved me!

GUIDO

Ah, I who loved you should therefore become your dupe! No, no! Now listen to me! I speak to you calmly, I have ceased to be angry . . . I have gone through too much, I begin suddenly to feel old . . . No, I am not angry . . . There is no anger left in me—something else will take its place, I suppose—old age, madness, I know not yet . . . At present I look, I search, I grope in myself, to discover the happiness that once was mine . . . I have one hope, one hope alone; a hope so frail that I scarcely can grasp it . . . A word would destroy it; and yet, in my despair, I must make the attempt . . . Vanna, I was wrong to call back the crowd before knowing . . . I should have remembered how galling it must be to you to proclaim to them all that that monster had caused you to suffer . . . Yes, I should have waited until we were alone; then you would have confessed the truth, the horrible truth. But I know it, alas! and the others all know. Of what avail to hide it, Vanna? . . . It is too late . . . There is no help for it now; and you, too, must understand . . . In moments like these reason is incapable of——

Monna Vanna

VANNA

Look at me, Guido; all my loyalty, all my strength and my truth are in my eyes now as I speak! . . . The truth, the truth, believe it! . . . He did not touch me.

GUIDO

Good! It is good. It is very good! Now I know all, and all is gone from me . . . Yes, it is the truth; or rather, it is love. Ah, I understand; you seek to save him. I did not realise that the woman I loved could change so quickly. But not that way can he be saved! [He raises his voice.] Hear me, all of you! I will for the last time swear an oath . . . To restrain myself now demands superhuman effort; my hold on myself is weakening. I make one final effort, there is one moment yet before I break down . . . That moment I will not lose . . . Can you hear me, you all; or is my voice grown too weak? Come nearer, nearer! . . . You see this woman, that man; they love each other . . . Well. Now hear me. I am weighing all my words as scrupulously as one weighs the medicine given to the dying . . . These two shall go from me here, with my consent, shall go freely, unmolested, untouched, unharmed. They shall take with them whatever they choose. You shall open your ranks to afford them passage. You shall strew their path with flowers, if it so please you. They shall go wheresoever their love may guide their footsteps; and all I ask in exchange is that this woman shall first of all tell me the truth, the only possible truth . . . That is the one thing left to me now that I can still love in her . . . I demand the truth that she owes me, in exchange for what I will give her . . . You understand,

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

Vanna? you have only one word to say . . .
All here are witness . . .

VANNA

I have told you the truth . . . He did not touch me . . .

GUIDO

It is well. You have spoken—you have condemned him. Now there is nothing more to be done. [He calls the guards and points to PRINZIVALLE.] That man belongs to me; take him and bind him; thrust him into the lowest dungeon beneath this hall. I shall go with you. [To VANNA.] You will never see him again; but on my return I shall report to you his last words . . .

VANNA

[Throwing herself in the midst of the guards, who are seizing PRINZIVALLE and leading him away.] No, no! I have lied, I have lied. [To GUIDO.] Yes, what you say is true! [Pushing the guards away.] Go, you must not take what is mine! For he is mine, he belongs to me, not to you! To me alone! It is for me to punish—the coward who when I was helpless, defenceless . . .

Monna Vanna

PRINZIVALLE

[Trying to drown her voice.] She lies! She lies! She lies to save me, but torture me as you will——

VANNA

Be silent! [Turning to the crowd.] He is afraid! [Approaching PRINZIVALLE, as though enforcing silence upon PRINZIVALLE.] Give me chains, and irons! Now that I dare speak out my hatred, it is I who shall bind him, I who brought him here. [Whispering to PRINZIVALLE as she ties his hands.] Be silent! He saves us, be silent! He has joined us. I belong to you, I love you! I love you, my Gianello! I put these chains on you, but I shall guard you, and free you! We two shall fly together! [Shouting as though enforcing silence upon PRINZIVALLE.] Be silent! [Addressing the crowd.] He pleads for mercy! [Uncovering his face.] Look at his face; it was my dagger, my dagger inflicted that wound! Look at him!

Monna Vanna

He, the coward, the monster! [Seeing that the guards make a movement as though to remove PRINZIVALLE.] No, no, leave him to me! He is my victim, my prey! It is I who have bought him! He belongs to me!

GUIDO

Why did he come, and why did you lie to me?

VANNA

[Hesitating and picking her words.] Why I lied . . . I scarcely know, I did not want to say . . . Ah, well, I must tell you now . . . There are times when one scarcely knows what one does, and is groping in the dark . . . Yes, you shall know, you shall know, for now I have torn away the veil . . . It was the thought of your love, of your despair, that alarmed me . . . But I will tell you. [In a calmer voice and with more assurance.] No, no, I had not the idea you speak of . . . I did not bring him here that we two, you and I, should be publicly avenged in the midst of a crowd; my idea, perhaps, was less noble, but my love for you prompted me . . . I yearned to inflict a cruel death upon him, but was anxious also that the horrible memory of this horrible night should not weigh upon you to the end of your days . . . It was my intention to revenge myself in the dark . . . To inflict a slow, lingering death upon him . . . Do you see? . . . Kill him slowly, little by little, till his blood, falling drop by drop, should have wiped out his crime . . . You would never have known the awful truth, and there would have been no spectre between us . . . I feared, I confess, that the memory of this would lessen your love for me . . . I was foolish, I know . . . It was mad to expect you to believe . . . But now you shall learn all . . . [Addressing the crowd.] Hear me, and you shall judge me! What I said before I said for Guido's sake, for the sake of our love . . . Now I shall tell you all . . . I tried to kill that man; I wounded him, as you see . . . But he disarmed me . . . Then I thought of a deeper revenge, and I smiled on him; and he, the fool, had faith in my smile . . . And now he is here in his tomb, that I myself shall seal down . . . I kissed him, and he believed in my kiss; and he followed me, like a lamb

Monna Vanna

Monna Vanna

And I hold him now in my hands, and my hands shall close down on him! . . .

GUIDO

[Approaching.] Vanna! . . .

VANNA

Look at me well! . . . So mad is this man, he believed me at once when I said "Prinzivalle, I love you!" . . . Ah, he would have followed me down to the heart of hell! . . . And now he is my man; he is mine, before God and the world! I have won, I have bought him! . . . [She totters and supports herself against the column.] Take care, I fall. There is too much joy now, in the thought of the vengeance to come! [To MARCO.] Father, I entrust him to your care, till I am stronger . . . You shall take charge of him, find a prison for him, a profound dungeon into which no one shall enter . . . And give me the key; I must have the key; I want it at once. No one shall touch him, go near him; he belongs to me, to me; he is mine; I alone shall punish . . . Guido, he belongs to me! [Stepping towards

Monna Vanna

MARCO.] Father, he is mine; you shall answer for him. [She looks fixedly at him.] You understand, you are his guardian. You are responsible for him; not a hand shall approach him, and when I go to him he shall be as he is, now that I give him to you. [PRINZIVALLE is taken away.] Fare you well, my Prinzivalle! Ah, we shall meet again!

[While GUIDO is in the midst of the soldiers, who brutally remove PRINZIVALLE, VANNA screams, totters, and falls into the arms of MARCO, who rushes forward to support her.]

MARCO

[Rapidly, in a low voice, bending over VANNA as she lies in his arms.] Yes, Vanna, I understand; I understand your falsehood. You have achieved the impossible . . . It is just and very unjust, like all the things that one does . . . and still it is life that is right . . . Collect yourself, Vanna; you will have to lie again, since he refuses to believe . . . [Calling GUIDO.] Guido, she asks for you . . . Guido, she is coming to herself . . .

Monna Vanna

GUIDO

[Rushing up and taking her in his arms.]
My Vanna! See, she smiles! . . . Vanna, tell me! . . . I never doubted . . . Now it is over, and all will be forgotten—wiped away in our good revenge . . . It was all a bad dream . . .

VANNA

[Opening her eyes, and speaking in a feeble voice.] Where is he? Yes, yes, I know, I remember . . . Give me the key
. . . The key of his prison; none but myself must . . .

GUIDO

The moment the guards come back they shall bring the key to you, and all shall be as you wish . . .

VANNA

I want it for myself alone. So that I may be quite sure, and that no one else . . . Yes, it has been a bad dream . . . but the beautiful one will begin. The beautiful one will begin . . .
